ited him, he knew me, and hopf to engoing I I

\mathbf{T} and \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{T} and \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H} \mathbf{H}

ADVENTURES

OF

GIL BLAS of Santillane.

wol. II.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. I. Gil Blas being disgusted at the irregularities of the actresses, quits the service of Arsenia, and gets into a more creditable family.

REMNANT of honour and religion, which I did not fail to preserve, amidst such corruption of morals, made me resolve not only to leave Arsenia, but also to break off all correspondence with Laura, whom, however, I could not help loving, though I was fenfible of her flagrant infidelity: Happy is he who can thus profit by those moments of reflection that interrupt the pleasures which engross his attention! Early one morning. I bundled up my cloaths, and without clearing with Arfenia, who was indeed, little or nothing in my debt; or taking leave of my dear Laura, I quitted the house where I had breathed nothing but the air of debauchery; and I had no fooner performed fuch a good action than heaven rewarded me for it, by throwing me in the way of the steward of Don Matthias my late master. Having VOL. II.

faluted him, he knew me, and stopt to enquire if I was in any service; to which I answered, that I had been about a minute or two out of place: for that after having lived about a Month with Arsenia, whose behaviour I did not like, I had lest her of my own accord, in order to preserve my innocence. The steward, as if he had been scrupulously religious, approved of my delicacy, and told me that since I was a young man of such honour, he would make it his business to settle me in an advantageous place. He performed his promise, and that very day introduced me into the service of Don Vincent de Guzman, whose manager was one of his acquaintance.

I could not have got into a better family, and therefore had no cause to be displeased with my situation in the fequel. Don Vincent was a very rich old nobleman, who had lived many years without law fuit or wife; the phyficians having deprived him of his spouse, by endeavouring to free her of a cough, which she might have preferved much longer had the abstained from their prescrip-Instead of marrying again, he had applied himfelf wholly to the education of Aurora, his only daughter, who was then going in her fix and twentieth year, and juffly paffed for an accomplished young lady: for with an uncommon share of beauty, she had an excellent genius, perfectly well cultivated. Her father, though he was no conjurer, possessed the happy talent of managing his affairs to the best advantage; but had one fault, which, however, is pardonable in old men. He delighted in talking, and above all things, of war and bloodshed. If any body was so unfortunate as to touch that ftring in his presence, he instantly set the trumpet to his mouth; and the hearers were very happy if they got off for the relation of two fieges and three battles. As he had spent two thirds of his life in the army, his memory was an inexhaustable source of different actions, which were not always liftened to with the same pleasure that he felt in recounting them. Besides, he stammered in his speech, and was very prolix, which rendered his manner of relating very disagreeable. Otherwise, I never knew a nobleman of a better character. He had a great deal of æquanimity, and was neither passionate nor whimfical:

whimfical: a circumstance which I admired very much in a man of quality. Though he was a good economist, he kept an honourable house, his domestics consisting of several footmen, and three women who waited on Aurora. I soon perceived that the steward of Don Matthias, had procured a good post for me, and bent all my endeavours to maintain myself in it: for this purpose, I began by reconnoitring the ground; that is, studying the different humours of every body in the family, then regulating my conduct by the observations I made, it was not long before I acquired the good will of my master, and all his servants.

When I had been about a Month in Don Vincent's family, I thought I perceived that his doughter diffinsuified me from all the reft of the valets in the house. Always when her eyes were fixed upon me, I remarked a fort of complaifance in her countenance, which I could not observe when she looked at my fellows. Had I not lived among beaux and players, it would never have come into my head to imagine that Aurora could think of me; but I was a good deal spoiled among these gentlemen, who are feldom extremely delicate in their fentiments of the most virtuous ladies. " If (said I to myfelt) we may believe those flage-players, they are sometimes benefited by the whims to which women of quality are subject. And how do I know that my mistress is free from fuch caprice ?-No! (added 1) I cannot believe it. She is not one of tho'e Meffalinas, who belying the pride of their birth, humble their affections to unworthily, even to the dust, and dishonour themselves without blushing. But rather, one of those virtuous, though tender, young ladies, who fatisfied with the bounds prescribed by honour, to their inclinations, make no scruple of inspiring as well as of entertaining a delicate passion, which yields amusement without danger."

These were my sentiments of my mistress, the I did not know precisely how to interpret her behaviour. In the mean time, as often as she saw me, she did not fail to simile and express joy in her countenance; so that without passing for a tool, any man might have been enforced by such fair appearances: I therefore could resist them no longer; but concluded, that Aurora was strongly

L 3

T. A. L.

captivated

fair

with fum

mig

the wait

that for ten.

for

nig

of a

aga

wh

cau

do

COL

to qu

an

go

la

20

VO

hi

fr

DO

tf

II

tl

P

¥

i

8

N

captivated with my merit; and looked upon mylelfat one of those happy domestics whose servitude is sweetened by love. That I might appear in some measure, less unworthy of the favour which my good fortune had procured for me, I began to take more care of my person than I had ever done before: I spent all the money I had in linen, essences, and pomatums: the first thing I did of a morning was to dress and persume myself, that I might not appear in dishabille before my mistress; and with this attention to my exteriors, and other airs I assumed, in order to please, I flattered myself that my hap-pinels was not far off.

Among Aurora's women there was one called Ortiz. an old gentlewoman who had lived more than twenty years in the family, and nurfed Don Vincent's daughter. whom the ftill ferved in quality of duenna, though the no longer performed the difagreeable part of that function: but on the contrary, instead of discovering as formally, the actions of Aurora, her fole bufiness now was to conceal them. One evening, Dame Ortiz, having found an opportunity of speaking to me without being overheard, told me foftly, that if I was wife and difcreet, I would be in the garden'at midnight, where I should be informed of things which I would not be forry to hear. I answered, squeezing the duenna's hand, that I would not fail to be there; and we parted immediately for fear of being surprised. Heavens! how did the time hang on my hands, from that instant to supper, (which in our family was always over in good time) and from thence to my mafter's going to bed ! Every thing feemed to drag on with extraordinary flowness; and to crown my chagrin, when Don Vincent retired to his bed-chamber, instead of going to relt, he began to fight over again all his campaigns in Portugal, with which he had so often stunned me before. But one thing which he had never done hitherto, and referved for this evening, was to tell me the names of all the officers who had diffinguished themselves in his time, and even to recount their exploits. What did I fuffer in hearing him to an end! He left off speaking, however, at last, and got into bed. Upon which, I went into the little closet where I flept, from whence there was a passage by a pair of back Itairs, stairs, into the garden, and anointed my whole body with essence; I then put on a clean shirt strongly perfumed, and having neglected nothing which I thought might slatter the passion of my mistress, went directly to the place of affignation.

Not finding Ortiz there, I concluded that, tired with waiting for me, she had returned to her apartment, and that the happy minute was past. I blamed Don Vincent for it, and as I was curfing his campaigns, heard it firike This made me believe that the clock went wrong, for I was perfuaded that it was at least an hour past midnight, but I was so happily mistaken, that a good quarter of an hour after this, I heard another clock ftrike ten again. " Very well, (said I to myself) I have but two whole hours to dance attendance, and they shall have no cause to complain of my punctuality. What must we do till twelve? Let us take a turn in the garden, and consider the part I am to play, which is a pretty new one to me who am but a novice in the whims of women of quality. I know well enough how to behave with Abigails and actreffes; these you accost with a familiar air, and come to the point without ceremony: but we must go another way to work with ladies of fashion : the gallant, I imagine, must be polite, complaisant, tender, and respectful, though not timorous: instead of endeavouring to hasten his own happiness, by the violence of his transports, he ought to lie in wait for the moment of frailty."

These were my resections, and this the conduct I proposed to observe with Aurora; representing to myself that in a little time, I should have the pleasure of seeing myself at her seet, and of saying a thousand passionate things to that amiable object. I even recollected all the passages of our theatrical pieces, which might be of service to me, and do me honour during our interview; and by a seasonable application of these, I hoped, (after the example of some players whom I knew) to pass for a wit, though I could only boast of a memory. Absorbed in these resections which amused my impatience more agreeably than the military stories of my master, I heard the clock strike eleven; upon which, I plunged again into my reverse, sometimes walking, and sometimes sitting ting in an arbor at the farther end of the garden. The long expected hour of twelve at last struck, and in a few m nutes, Ortiz, as punctual, though less impatient than I, appeared. " Signior Gil Blas, (faid the, accosting " me) how long have you been here?" I replied, two hours. " In good footh, (said she laughing) you are very exact: it is a pleasure to make an assignation with you. True, indeed, (continued she, with a serious air) you cannot pay too dear for the happy tidings I have to tell you. My mistress wants to have some private conversation with you. I will say no more. The rest is a fecret you must learn from her own mouth. Follow me, and I will conduct you into her apartment." So faying, the duenna took me by the hand, and led me in a mysterious manner, through a little door, of which she had the key, into the chamber of her mistress.

CHAP. II. The Reception that Gil Blas met with from Aurora, and the conversation that passed between them.

I Saluted Aurora, whom I found in dishabille, in the most respectful manner, and with the best grace I could put on; and she received me with a smiling air, forced me to sit down by her, and bad her ambassadress retire into another room. After this prelude, with which I was not ill pleased, she addressed herself to me in these words. "Gil Blas, you must have perceived that I look upon you in a favourable light, and distinguish you from the rest of my father's servants; and even though you may not have observed, by my locks, that I have a regard for you, the step I have taken this night, will leave you no room to doubt it."

I gave her no time to proceed, but believing that I ought, as a polite gentleman, to spare her modesty the pain of a more formal explanation, I started up in a transport, and throwing myself at her seet, like a stage-hero, who falls on his knees before his princes, cried, in a theatrical tone, "Ah, madam! can it be possible that Gil Blas, hitherto the foot ball of fortune, and outcast of nature, is to happy as to have inspired you with sentiments—" "Don't speak so loud, (said my mistress, laughing)

laug

the

me

(cor

wift

you

lan

and

and

and

igno

be :

info

car

acc

no i

and

you

wh

COI

rec

alv

fed

my fhe

ter

fhe

m

of

by

lef

Bl

re

On

w

th

to

m

tro

laughing) you will awaken my women who are afleep in the next room. Get up, take your feat again, and hear me to an end, without interrupting me. Yes, Gil Blas, (continued she, resuming her gravity) I am your wellwisher; and, as a proof of my esteem, will impart to you a fecret, on which the repose of my life depends : I am in love with a young gentleman of beauty, fortune, and illustrious birth: his name is Don Lewis Pacheco; and although I have feen him feveral times in the prado, and at public shews, I have never spoke to him, am even ignorant of his character, and don't know but he may be a person of bad morals. This is what I want to be informed of; and having occasion for a man to enquire carefully about his reputation; and bring me a faithful account of it, I make choice of you, and believe I run norisk, by intrusting you with this commission, in which, I hope, you will acquit yourfelf with fo much discretion and address, that I shall never repent of having made you my confidante."

Here my mistress lest of speaking, in order to know what answer I would make; and I, though at first difconcerted at being so disagreeably undeceived, quickly recollected myfelf and furmounting that shame, which is always the concomitant of unfuccessful rathness, expresfed so much zeal for the lady's interests, and devoted myself with so much ardour to her service, that though the might still continue to think that I had foolishly flattered myfelf with having made an impression on her heart, the faw very well that I knew how to make amends for my folly. I asked but two days to bring her an account of Don Lewis; after which, dame Ortiz being called in by her mistress, conducted me back into the garden, and left me there, after having faid, " Good night, Gil Blas, I know your punctuality fo well, that I need not recommend it to you to be early at the next affignation."

I returned to my chamber, not without some vexation to find my expectation baulked: nevertheless, I was wise enough to reslect, that it became me better to be the considere than the lover of my mittress. I considered too, that this might turn out to my advantage, as the messengers of love are, usually, well paid for their trouble; and I went to bed, in a sull resolution to per-

tre

he

th at

Va

an

of

m

(1

te

-b

form what Aurora defired. With this view, I went abroad next day, and found no difficulty in learning the place of abode of fuch a noted cavalier as Don Lewis. I enquired into his character in the neighbourhood; but those to whom I applied could not fully fatisfy my curiofity. This made me repeat my enquiries the following day, when I was more successful. Meeting, by accident, in the street, a young man of my acquaintance, we stopt to chat a little, and, that very instant, a friend of his happening to pass, made up to us, and told his comrade, that he had been just turned away by Don Pacheco, the father of Don Lewis, on suspicion of having drank a calk of wine belonging to his master. I did not lose fuch a fair opportunity of being informed of every thing I wanted to know, and succeeded so well by the questions I asked, that I went home very well satisfied that I was able to keep my word with my mistress. I was to see her again the next night, at the same hour, and in the fame manner as at first; but I did not suffer so much difquiet that night, and far from bearing the conversation of my old master with impatience, I introduced the subject of his campaigns, waited for twelve with the utmost tranquillity, and it was not until I had heard the hour repeated by several clocks, that I went down into the garden void of essence and persumes, resolved for the future, to retrench that extravagance.

I found the most trusty duenna at the rendezvous, and the upbraided me in a fatirical manner, for having abated in my diligence. I made no answer, but let her conduct me into the apartment of Aurora, who, as foon as I appeared, asked if I had got good intelligence of Don Lewis. "Yes, Madam, (faid I) and you shall hear it in two words. In the first place I must tell you, that he will fet out very foon, on his return to Salamanca, in order to finish his studies. He is a young cavalier of honour and probity, and being a gentleman and Castilian, his courage is not to be doubted; he has, besides, a great deal of wit, and his behaviour is very agreeable : but that which perhaps you will least like in him, is a disposition too much a kin to that of most of our young noblemen, extremely takish. You must know that young as he is, he has already had two actreffes treffes in keeping." " Is it possible! (cried Aurora) heavens! what morals! but are you certain, Gil Blas, that he leads such a licentious life?" " Oh! I don't at all doubt it, madam, (I replied) I was informed by a valet, who was turned out of his fervice, this morning; and fervants are commonly very fincere, when they talk of their mafter's faults : besides, he keeps company with Don Alexo Segiar, Don Antonio Centelles, and Don Fernand de Gamboa; and that, alone, is a sufficient demonstration of his libertinism." " Enough, Gil Blas, (said my mistress fighing) on the credit of your report, I will combat my unworthy passion, which, though it has already taken deep root in my heart, I don't despair to overcome. Go, (added she, giving me a little purse well replenished) there's fomething for your trouble; beware of disclosing my secret, and remember that I depend upon your filence."

I assured my mistress, that she might make herself perfectly easy on that score, for I was the " Harpocrates of trufty valets. After this affurance, I withdrew, very impatient to know the contents of the purse, in which I found twenty pistoles. This made me believe, that Aurora would have certainly given me more, had I brought her agreeable tidings, fince she paid me so handsomely for fuch a mortifying piece of news: and I repented that I had not imitated the lawyers, who sometimes put a gloss upon the truth, in the practice of their profession; I was forry for having nipt in the bud an intrigue, the consequence of which might have been very advantageous to me: however, I had the confolation to fee myself indemnified for my unseasonable expence in essences and perfumes.

The great change that happened in the family of Don Vincent, and the strange resolution with which love inspired the fair Aurora.

COON after this adventure, Signior Don Vincent D happened to fall fick; and though he had not been in fuch an advanced age, the symptoms of his difease were so violent, that we had reason to fear a fatal issue. When he was first seized, two of the most famous phyficians of Madrid were sent for. One of them was called doctor Andros, and the other doctor Oquetos, who having examined the patient with great attention, were of opinion, that the humours of his body were in a state of fermentation: but in nothing else could they agree. "We must make haste, (said Andros) and purge off the humours, though they be crude, while they continue in this violent agitation of flux and reflux, left they fettle upon some noble part." Oquetos, on the contrary, maintained, that they ought to wait for the concoction of the humours, before they should employ a cathartic." " But your method (resumed the first) is directly oppofite to that of the prince of medicine: Hippocrates orders cathartics in the very first days of the most ardent fever, and fays, in express terms, that we must be ready to purge, when the humours are in the orgain; that is to fay, in a state of fermentation." " O! there you are mistaken, (replied Oquetos) Hippocrates, by the word orgafm, does not understand the fermentation, but the concoction of the humours."

^{*} Harpocrates, among the ancients, was worshipped as the god of filence,

Upon this the doctors grew passionate: one repeated the Greek text, and quoted all those authors, who had explained it in his way: the other relying on a Latin translation, pronounced it in a tone still more vociferous. Which of them was in the right? Don Vincent was not the man to decide that question; but seeing himself obliged to chuse, bestowed his considence on him who had dispatched the greatest number of patients; I mean the eldest of the two. Andros, therefore, who was the younger, withdrew, not without darting some strokes of raillery at his fenior, on his interpretation of the word orgafm. Oquetos, who remained triumphant, being a man of doctor Sangrado's principles, began, by ordering his patient to be copiously blooded, deferring his cathartic until the humours should be concocted: but death, who, without doubt, was afraid the purgation fo fagely delayed, would deprive him of his prey. prevented the concoction, and carried my master off. Such was the end of Signior Don Vincent, who lost man fate of t feve

his 1

A

whi cedo fbe alfo Not Dor ther

abai a-ne vate wis he haft fucl con help that not pat der her tha Dea thy pre

DIO out my lix, frie

to fin : to We

of v

his life, because his physician did not understand Greek. Aurora having celebrated her father's funerals, in a manner suitable to his birth, took possession of his estate, and being now mistress of herself, dismissed some of the domestics, with rewards proportioned to their several services, and, in a little time, retired to a castle, which she had on the banks of the Tagus, between Sacedon and Buendia. I was not only one of those whom the retained, and carried to the country with her, but also had the good fortune to become a necessary person. Notwithstanding the faithful report I had made to her of Don Lewis, the was still in love with that cavalier; or rather, finding herself unable to conquer her passion, she had abandoned herself entirely to it; and being no longer under a necessity of taking precautions to speak with me in private, "Gil Blas, (faid the fighing) I cannot forget Don Lewis: in spite of all my efforts to banish him from my thoughts he is fill present in my imagination; not such as thou haft painted him, plunged in all forts of debauch; but fuch as I would have him to be, tender, amorous, and constant." So faying, she began to melt, and could not help shedding some tears; which affected me so much, that I could scarce refrain from weeping also : and I could not make my court to her more effectually than by fympathizing with her forrow. " I fee thou haft a very tender disposition, my triend, (added she, after having dried her fair eyes) and I am fo well satisfied with thy zeal. that thou may'lt depend upon being well recompenced. Dear Gil Blas, I have more occasion now than ever for thy affiftance. I will disclose to thee a design, which at present engrosses me, and which thou wilt (no doubt) pronounce very capricious. Know, that I intend to fet out immediately for Salamanca, where I will disguise myself like a cavalier, and under the name of Don Felix, get acquainted with Pacheco, whose confidence and friendship I will endeavour to acquire: I will often speak to him of Aurora de Guzman, and call myself her coufin; by which means, he will, perhaps, express a defire to fee her; and then my expectation will be answered. We will have two different lodgings at Salamanca, in one of which I will pals for Don Felix, in the other for Aurora, and prefenting myfelf to the eyes of Don Lewis. fometimes metamorphosed into a man, and sometimes in my own drefs, I flatter myfelf, that I shall, by degrees, accomplish my purpose. I grant, (added she) that this is an extravagant scheme; but I am hurried away by my passion, and the innocence of my intention makes me infensible of the risk I must run."

I was very much of Aurora's opinion, with regard to the nature of her defign: nevertheless, how imprudent foever I judged it. I took care not to act the pedagogue, but, on the contrary, began to gild the pill, and undertook to prove, that this mad project was no more than an agreeable frolic, that could have no bad confequence. My mistress was pleased with this construction: for lovers are charmed with flattery, even in their most extravagant fancies. We now, therefore, looked upon this rash enterprize in no other light than that of a comedy, the skilful representation of which, it was our business to concert. Having chosen our actors from the fervants of the family; the parts were distributed, without the least quarrel or disturbance; because we were not players by profession. It was resolved that Dame Ortiz should act the part of Aurora's aunt, under the name of Donna Kimena de Guzman, attended by a valet and waiting-woman; and that Aurora, dreffed like a cavalier, should entertain me as valet de chambre, together with one of her own maids in the disguise of a page, to be always about her person. The characters being thus regulated we returned to Madrid, where we understood Don Lewis still was, but that it would not be long before he would fet out for Salamanca: upon which we ordered the necessary dresses to be made with all diligence; and when they were finished, my mistress caused them to be conveniently packed up, until we should find a proper time and place for putting them on. Then leaving the care of her house to the steward, she set out, in a coach drawn by four mules, and took the road to the kingdom of Leon, with all those of her fervants, who had parts to act in her performance.

We had already croffed Old Castile, when the axle-tree

flor

wh

nig

wh

anx

hele

Pin

tha

for

rep

vol fhe

wh

and

to

civ

fior

mu fto

28

10

on wa

be

m ga

28

an

de

A

10

b

C

tree of the coach gave way, between Avila and Villaflor, about three or four hundred paces from a cattle. which we perceived at the foot of a mountain. As night approcached, we were not a little embaraffed, when a peafant, passing by accident, rid us of our anxiety, by telling us, that the castle which we faw. belonged to Donna Elvira, widow of Don Pedro de Pinares, a lady whose character he extolled so much, that my mistress sent me to the castle, to beg a lodging, for one night. Elvira did not belye the countryman's report, but received me with great affability, and favoured Aurora's compliment with fuch an answer as the defired. We repaired immediately to the castle. whither our coach was dragged flowly by the mules, and at the gate met Don Pedro's widow, who came out to receive my mistress. I will pass over in silence the civil things that were faid, on both fides, on this occafion, and only observe, that Elvira was a lady pretty much advanced in years, but very polite, and underflood how to perform the duties of hospitality as well as any woman in the world. She conducted Aurora into a fumptuous apartment, where leaving her to repose a few moments, the came and employed her attention on the most minute things that concerned us. Afterwards, when supper was ready, she ordered the cloth to be laid in Aurora's chamber, where they fat down together at table. Don Pedro's widow was not one of those people who cloud the honour of their entertainments with a penfive and discontented air: she was of a gay disposition, and supported the conversation in an agreeable manner; expressing herself with great dignity and elegance. I admired her understanding, and the delicate turn of her thoughts, which feemed to charm Autora as well as me. They conceived a friendship for one another, and promifed to maintain a correspondence by letters. Our coach could not be refitted till the following day, and as we should run some risk by setting out late, it was determined that we should stay at the calle another night. We, in our turn, were ferved with a profusion of victuals, and our beds were no less comfortable than our meal. Next

Next day, my mistress found new charms in the conversation of Elvira, with whom she dined in a large hall, adorned with feveral pictures; one of which was remarkable for the beauty and wonderful expression of the figures, though it prefented a very tragical Scene to the view. A dead cavalier appeared tying on his back and drowned in his own blood, but feemed still to re tain a menacing air, even in death. Near him late young lady in another attitude, firetched also upon the ground; a sword was seen plunged in her bosom, and the breathed her last fighs, and fixing her dying eyes upon a young man, who feemed mortally grieved-at the loss of her. The painter had likewise drawn another figure, which did not escape my attention: this was an old man of a good mein, who, strongly affected with the objects that struck his view, discovered as much fensibility as the youth. One would have thought that each of them felt the same pangs, at fight of these doleful images, but that each received the impression in a different manner. The old man feemed overwhelmed with the profound forrow in which he was plunged: but there was fury mixed with the affliction of the youth. The painter had expressed the whole with such strength, that we could scarce withdraw our eyes from the per-My mistress having asked what story the picture represented; " Madam, (said Elvira) it is a saithful representation of the misfortunes of my family." This answer excited the curiofity of Aurora, who expressed such an eager inclination to know more, that Don Pedro's widow could not dispense with promising her the satisfaction she desired. This promise, which was made before Ortiz, her two companions and me, detained us all four in the hall after dinner. My Miftress would have fent us away, but Elvira perceiving that we longed fervently to hear the explanation of the picture, had the goodness to bid us stay, saying that the flory which she was going to relate, was none of those that required fecrecy; and immediately began in these words.

tot jeé

> ord Bu

fift

ha

lo

de

na

fh

ve

m

p

m

9

· CHAP. IV.

The baleful marriage. A Novel.

OGER king of Sicily had a brother and a fifter: the first, called Mainfroy, revolted against him, lighted up a dangerous and bloody war in the kingen, but had the misfortune to lofe two battles, and ill into the hands of the king, who contented himtelf ith punishing his rebellion, by depriving him of his li-This clemency ferved only to make Roger pass not a barbarian, in the opinion of one part of his fubjects, who faid he had only faved his brother's life, in order to exercise upon him a flow and inhuman revenge. But all the rest, with more foundation, imputed the harsh treatment that Mainfroy suffered in prison, to his fifter Mathilda alone: for the had, in effect, always hated the prince, and did not cease persecuting him as long as he lived: but the died foon after him, and her death was looked upon as a just punishment of her unnatural disposition.

Mainfroy having left two Sons, as yet in their infancy, Roger wished to get rid of them, fearing that when they hould arrive at a more advanced age, the desire of reverging their father would induce them to revive & faction which was not so much quelled, but that it might occasion new troubles in the state. He imparted his design to the senator Leontio Siffredi, his minister, who to divert him from putting it in execution undertook the education of prince Henriquez, the eldest, and advised him to commit the youngest, who was called Don Pedro, to the care of the constable of Sicily. Roger, persuaded that his nephews would be brought up by these men in that submission and duty which they owed to him, left the princes to their conduct, and took upon himself the care of his niece Conflantia, who was of the same age with Henriquez, and only daughter of the princess Mathilda; he furnished her

Vol. II. M with

^{*} This novel is a true story, on which the late Mr. Thomson has founded his tragedy of Tancred and Sigismunda.

with women and masters, and spared nothing in her education.

Leontio Siffredi had a castle two short leagues from Palermo, at a place called Belmont; and there that minister employed himself in rendering Henriquez worthy of mounting one day, the throne of Sicily. He foon obferved in that Prince, such amiable qualities, that he applied himself to the cultivation of them, as closely, as if he had had no children of his own. He was bleffed. however, with two daughters; the eldest of whom, called Blanch, younger by a year than the prince, was adorned with the most perfect beauty: the other named Porcia, whose birth occasioned her mother's death, was still in the cradle. Blanch, and prince Henriquez, as foon as they were capable of love, entertained a mutual passion; though they had not the liberty of conversing in private. The prince, however, did not fail to find opportunities fometimes; and knew fo well how to profit by these precious moments that he engaged the daughter of Siffredi to allow him to execute a project he had formed. Just about this time, it happened that Leontio was obliged by the king's orders, to make a journey into one of the most remote provinces of the island: and during his absence, Henriquez caused an opening to be made in the wall of his apartment, that was contiguous to the chamber of Blanch; supplying it with a sliding partition of wood, that opened and shut, without being perceived; because it was so closely joined to the cieling. that the eye could not discover the artifice. A skilful architect, whom the prince had made his friend, performed the work with equal diligence and fecrecy.

Through this passage, the amorous Henriquez introduced himself sometimes into the chamber of his mistress: but he did not abuse her favour: for, though she was imprudent enough to allow him a private entrance into her apartment, she did not condescend so far, until he had assured her, that he would never ask any thing that innocence could not grant. One night, he found her very uneasy, because she had heard that Roger was very ill, and had sent for Siffredi, as high-chancellor of the kingdom, in order to entrust him with his last will. She represented to herself already, her dear Henriquez on the throne, and being afraid of lofing him in that high station, was under the utmost anxiety; and the tears stood in her eyes when he appeared. "Heavens! you weep, madam: what must I think of that forrow with which I fee you overwhelmed?" Sir, (replied Blanch) I cannot conceal my alarms: the king your uncle, will foon ceafe to live and you will fucceed him. When I therefore foresee how far your new greatness will remove you from me, I own, I cannot be unconcerned. A monarch feldom beholds things with a lover's eye, and that which was his utmost ambition while he was a subject, affects him but flightly when he is on the throne. Whether it be an unhappy presage, or reason only that inspires me, I feel my soul agitated with emotions that all my confidence in your goodness cannot assuage; and though I dare not doubt your generofity, I cannot help distrusting my own desliny." " Adorable Blanch ! replied the prince) your fears are obliging, and justify my attachment to your charms: but the excess of your doubts injures my love, and (if I may be allowed to fay fo) the esteem which you owe me. No! think not that my destiny and yours can ever be separated. Believe rather, that you will always be the object of my happiness and joy. Lay aside your fear, therefore, and let it not disturb such endearing moments." "Ah, " Sir! (answered the daughter of Leontio) as soon as you are crowned, your subjects, perhaps, will demand for your queen, a princess descended from a long race of kings, whose splendid nuptials may add new realms to yours; and perhaps, alas! you will answer their expectation, even at the expence of your inclination." " Ha! why, (replied Henriquez, with some warmth) why are you thus prone to torment yourfelf, by raising fuch an afflicting image of what will never happen. Should heaven dispose of the king, my uncle, and make me master of Sicily, I swear that I will espouse you in Palermo, in presence of all my court, and I invoke all that is facred, to confirm my oath.

Siffredi's daughter was cheared by the protestations of Henriquez, and the rest of their conversation turned on the king's distemper: on which occasion, Henriquez discovered the goodness of his heart in lamenting his bo

p2

re

to ha

fer

no

fid

TU

pf

10

21

th

21

th

h

in jo

th

th

ft

21 er

b

tŀ

in

H

h

T

20

O

tl

V

fe

٨

e

uncle's fate, with which he had no great reason to be affected: the force of blood, making him regret a prince, by whose death he should acquire a crown. Blanch, as yet, did not know all the missfortunes that threatened her. The constable of Sicily had met her coming out of her father's apartment, one day when he was at the castle of Belmont, on some important affairs, was captivated with her beauty, and next day, demanded her in marriage of Siffredi, who consented to the match; but Roger's distemper intervening, the nuptials were deferred, and Blanch knew nothing of the matter.

One morning, just as Henriquez had done dreffing, he was surprized to see Leontio, followed by Blanch, come into his apartment. " Sir, (faid that minister to him) the news I bring are afflicting, but the consolation with which they are attended ought to moderate your grief. king, your uncle, is dead, after having left you heir to his sceptre, and Sicily is subject to your sway. The grandees of the realm, who attend your orders at Palermo, have commissioned me to receive them from your mouth, and I am come, Sir, with my daughter, the first of your new subjects, to offer our fincere homage." The prince, who knew very well that Roger had laboured two months, under a disease that gradually consumed him, was not much surprised at this piece of news; nevertheless, ftruck with the fudden change of his condition, he felt a thousand confused emotions rise within his breast; and having mused some time, broke silence, by addressing himself to Leontio, in these words; " Sage Siffredi, I shall always look upon you as my father, glory in regulating my conduct by your counsel, and you shall be as much king in Sicily as I am." So faying, he advanced to a table, on which there was a standish, and taking a fheet of paper, wrote his name at the bottom of the page. "What are you about to do. Sir, (said Siffredi to him.) " I am going to manifest my gratitude and esteem," (answered Henriquez) presenting the sheet to Blanch, and faying, " Receive, madam, this pledge of my faith, and of the empire over my inclinations which I now yield to you." Blanch took it, blushing, and made this answer to the prince; " I receive with respect the favours of my king; but I depend upon a father; and I hope sope your Majesty will not take it ill, that I deposite this paper in his hands, to be used as his prudence shall direct him."

She accordingly gave the subscription of Henriquez to her father, who then observed what till that moment had escaped his penetration. He discerned the prince's sentiments, and said to him, "Your Majesty shall have no cause to reproach me; for I will not abuse the confidence"—"My dear Leontio! (cried Henriquez, interrupting him) don't imagine you can abuse it. Whatever use you shall make of the paper, I will approve of your determination. But go, (added he) return to Palermo, order the preparations to be made for my coronation, and tell my subjects, that I will follow you immediately thither, in order to receive their oaths of allegiance, and assure them of my affection." The minister obeyed his new master's orders, and with his daughter, set out for Palermo.

A few hours after their departure, the prince took the fame road, more engroffed by his love, than by the high rank to which he was raised. As soon as he arrived in the city, he was faluted with innumerable shouts of joy, and amidst the acclamations of his people, entered the palace, where every thing was already prepared for the ceremony, and where he found the prince's Conflantia in deep mourning, and to all appearance, very much affected with Roger's death. As they owed one another a mutual compliment of condolance on the event, they both acquitted themselves very handsomely ; but it was more cold on the fide of Henriquez, than on that of Constance, who, in spite of the enmity subsisting between their families, could not hate the prince. He placed himself on the throne and the princess fat on his right hand, in an elbow chair not quite so high. The grandees of the kingdom took their places, each according to his rank; the ceremony began, and Leontio, as high-chancellor of the flate, and keeper of the late king's will, opened and read it with an audible voice. This deed contained in Substance, that Roger, feeing himself without iffue, named the eldest son of Mainfroy for his successor, on condition, that he should espouse the princess Constance; which is he resused to M 3 perform, perform, he should forseit the crown of Sicily to the infant Don Pedro, his brother, who should enjoy it on the same terms.

Henriquez was confounded at these words! the refiriction gave him incredible pain, which became still more violent, when Leontio after having read the will, pronounced to the whole assembly. " My Lords, having reported the last intentions of our late king, to our new monarch, that generous prince confents to honour his cousin the princets Constance, with his hand." At these Words, Henriquez interrupted the chancellor, faying, " Leontio, remember the writing which Blanch" -" Sir, (said Siffredi with precipitation, before the prince had time to explain himself) here it is. The grandees of the realm (added he, shewing the paper to the affembly) will here fee by your majesty's august signature, the efteem you have for the prince's and the deterence you pay to the last will of the deceased king, your uncle." Having spoke these words he read the deed with which he himself had filled the paper, containing the most folemn engagements to marry Constance, conformable to the intention of Roger. The hall rung with repeated shouts of all present, who cried, "Long live our magnanimous king, Henriquez:" for as no body, was ignorant of the aversion which that prince had always manifelted for the princess, it was feared not without reason, that he would revolt against the condition of the will, and, by these means, raise commotions in the kingdom. But the reading of this paper entirely composed the minds of the nobles and people, and excited those general acclamations, which, in fecret, tortured the monarch's foul.

Constance, who, both on account of her own glory, and her passion for Henriquez, enjoyed the public satisfaction more than any body, chose this time to assure him of her gratitude. But the prince, in vain, endeavouring to restrain himself, received her compliment with great affliction, and was, indeed, in such disorder, that he could not even perform what decency required. At last, yielding to the violence of his passion, he approached Sistredi, whom the duty of his office obliged to be pretty near his person, and, with a low voice, said,

"What have you done, Leontio? the subscription, which I put into your daughter's hands, was not intend-You have betrayed"!-" Sir, (said Sifed for this use. fredi, interrupting him, in a resolute tone) consider your own glory; if you refuse to follow the will of the king your uncle, you lose the crown of Sicily." He had no fooner spoke in this manner, than he removed at a greater distance from the king, that he might not have an opportunity to reply. Henriquez remained in the utmost perplexity, and felt himself agitated by contrary emotions. He was incensed against Siffredi, he could not resolve to abandon Blanch : But, distracted between her and the interest of his glory, it was some time before he could come to any resolution. However he was determined at last, and thought he had fallen upon a method to preserve the daughter of Siffredi, without renouncing the throne. He feigned submission to the will of Roger. and purposed, while a dispensation for his marriage with his coulin, should be foliciting at Rome, to gain the nobles of the realm by his bounty, and establish his power so well, that he should not be obliged to fulfil its conditions.

As foon as he had formed this defign, he became more tranquil, and turning to Constance, confirmed to her what the high chancellor had read before the whole affembly. But in the very moment, when he betrayed himself so far as to plight his troth to her, Blanch arrived in the council hall. She came thither by her father's command, to pay her respects to the princess, and her ears were flruck with the words of Henriquez, at her first entrance. Besides, Leontio, being desirous that she should have no cause to doubt of her misfortune, said, while he presented her to Constance, "Daughter, do homage to your queen, and with her all the sweets of a flourithing reign and happy marriage." This terrible stroke overwhelmed the unfortunate Blanch! in vain she endeavoured to conceal her grief; she blushed and grew pale alternately, and shook through every limb. Nevertheless the princess had not the least suspicion of the cause, but attributed the disorder in which she paid her compliment to the perplexity of a young creature bred up in solitude, and altogether unaccustomed to the court. M 4

It was quite otherwise with the young king, the fight of Blanch abashed him; and the despair he observed in her eyes, transported him quite beside himself. He did not doubt, that judging by appearances, she believed him unfaithful. He would have been less uneasy, could he have spoke to her: but how could he find an opportunity, when all Sicily, as one may say, had its eyes upon him. Besides, the cruel Siffredi deprived him of that hope: for reading the thoughts of these two lovers, in their looks, and willing to prevent the mischief which the violence of their passion might create in the state, that minister, in an artful manner, carried his daughter out of the assembly, and set out with her, on his return to Belmont; resolved, for more reasons than one, to have her married as foon as possible.

They were no fooner arrived, than he made her acquainted with all the horror of her fate, by declaring that he had promised her in marriage to the constable. " Just heaven! (cried she, in a transport of grief, which her father's presence could not repress) for what direful punishment is the unfortunate Blanch reserved!" Her despair was even so violent as to suspend all the faculties of her foul. She was feized with an universal chilness, and becoming clay-cold and wan, fwooned away in the arms of her father. He was affected with her condition; but, though he shared her affliction with all the tenderness of a parent, his first resolution still remained unshaken. Blanch at length recovered her spirits, more through the exquisite sensation of her grief, than through the water which Siffredi sprinkled on her face; and perceiving his officious care for her recovery, while the opened her languishing eyes, " Sir, (said she, with a feeble voice) I am ashamed that you have seen my weakness; but death which must soon end my torments, will, in a little time, rid you of an unhappy daughter, who has dared to dispose of her heart without your consent."" No, my dear Blanch, (replied Leontio) live, and let virtue resume its empire in your breaft. The constable's passion does you honour; he is the most considerable match in the kingdom."-" I efteem his person and his merit, (said Blanch, interrupting bim) but, fir, the king had made me hope"-" Daughter, (faid Siffredi, cutting her short in his turn) I know all that you can fay on that subject. I am not ignorant of your tenderness for the prince, which, at another conjuncture, I should not disapprove. You should even see me eager to insure you of the hand of Henriquez, if the interest of his glo:y, and that of the state, did not oblige him to bestow it on Constance. It is on that condition only that the late king defigned him for his fuccessor; and would you have him prefer you to the crown of Sicily? Believe me, I sympathize with you in the cruel froke you fuffer: but fince we cannot withstand the decrees of destiny, make one generous effort. Your glory is concerned in concealing from the kingdom the vain hope with which you flattered yourself. Your sensibility for the king, may raise reports to your disadvantage; and the only means of preventing them, will be to marry the constable. In short, Blanch, this is no time to deliberate. The king yields you for a throne, and marries Constance. The contable has my promise, which I beg you will perform; and if I must use my authority to bring you to this resolution, I order you to comply."

So faying, he left her to reflect upon what she had heard, hoping, that after having maturely confidered the arguments he had used, to support her virtue against her inclination, the would refolve, of herfelf, to give her hand to the constable. In this he was not mistaken. But, what pangs did it cost the melancholy Blanch, before the came to that determination! the was in a condition, which, of all others, was most worthy of compaffion! Grief for feeing her presages of the infidelity of Henriquez changed into certainty, and for being constrained in losing him, to give herself away to another, whom she could not love, created in her such violent transports of affliction, that every moment was attended with new torture. " If my misfortune is certain, (cried she) how can I resist it without dying? cruel destiny! why was I fed with the most delicious hope, when I was doomed to such an abyss of misery! and thou, perfidious lover! how durft thou betroth thyfelf to another. after thou hadft promifed eternal fidelity to me? haft thou fo foon forgot the faith which thou hadft fworn? As a punishment for having so cruelly deceived me, may MS beaven make the nuptial bed, which thou art going to stain with perjury, not a scene of pleasure, but remorse! may the caresses of Constance convey poison to thy unsaithful heart! and may thy marriage be as baleful as mine! Yes, traitor! I will espouse the constable, whom I cannot love, to revenge me upon myself, and punish me, for having so indiscreetly chosen the object of my love. Since my religion forbids me to make an attempt upon my life, the days I have to live shall be nothing else than an unhappy series of troubles and disquiet. If thou still preservest any tenderness for me, thou wilt be mortised at seeing me throw myself into the arms of another; and if thou hast entirely forgot me, Sicily, at least, may boatt of having produced a woman, who punished herself, for having too simply disposed of her heart."

In such a situation did this unhappy victim of love and duty pass the night that preceded her marriage with the constable; and Siffredi finding her next day ready to comply with his defire, made hafte to take the advantage of that favourable disposition. He sent for the constable to Belmont that same day, and married him privately to his daughter in the chapel of the castle. It was not enough to renounce a crown, to lofe, for ever, a person whom the loved, and bestow herself upon the object of her hatred, but she was also obliged to dissemble her sentiments before a husband who was inflamed with the most ardent passion for her, and naturally of a jealous disposition. That spouse, charmed with the possession of what he held most dear, was continually in her company, and did not even allow her the fad contolation of bewailing her misfortune in fecret. When night approached, the daughter of Leontio felt her affliction redouble: but what were her pangs, when her women, after having undressed, left her alone with the constable! He asked, in a respectful manner, the cause of that forrow with which she seemed to be depressed; and Blanch, perplexed by the question, feigned herself indis-This deceived her husband at first, but he did not long continue in his miltake : for, as he was really concerned at the condition in which he faw her, and pressed her to go to bed, his entreaties, which she misinterpreted, terpreted, presented such a cruel image to her imagination, that, being unable to contain herfelf any longer, the gave free vent to her fighs and tears. What a fight was this for a man, who believed himself at the very summit of his happiness! He no longer doubted that the affliction of his wife portended something finister to his love. Neverthe'efs, though the knowledge of it threw him into a fituation almost as deplorable as that of Blanch, he had fuch command of himself, that he concealed his sufpicions. He redoubled his intreaties, and continued to press his spouse to go to rest, assuring her, that he would not interrupt the repose which she seemed so much to want. He even offered to call her women, if the thought that their affiftance could alleviate her indisposition. Blanch, encouraged by this promise, told him, that her present weakness only required a little fleep. He pretended to believe her, and going to bed together, they passed a night very different from those which Cupid and Hymen bestow on two lovers inspired by mutual passion.

While Siffredi's daughter indulged her forrow, the constable endeavoured, within himself, to divine the cause that rendered his marriage so unhappy. He concluded, that there was a rival in the case; but was bewildered in his own imagination, when he attempted to discover who that rival was; and the sole result of his conjectures was, that he was the most unhappy of all mankind. He had already spent two thirds of the night in these agitations, when his ears were struck with a hollow noise; and he was not a little surprised to hear fome body walking foftly in the chamber. He believed himself mistaken; for he remembered that he himself had locked the door, after Blanch's women were gone, and drew back the curtain to discover by the evidence of his eyes, the cause of the noise which he heard: but the light, which had been left in the chimney, was extinguished, and, in a little time, he heard the name of Blanch repeated feveral times, in a foft and languishing tone. Then his jealous suspicions were enslamed to fury, and his honour alarmed, obliging him to rife, in order to prevent an affront, or take vengeance for it, he feized his fword, and moved towards that fide whence the voice feemed feemed to come. Feeling a naked fword opposed to his own, he advanced, the other retired, he pursued, and the other vanished from his pursuit. In vain did he fearch for him, who seemed to fly, through all the corners of the room, as much as the darkne's would allow; he could not find him; he stopt, listened and herad nothing. All seemed to be enchantment! he went to the door, which he imagined had savoured the slight of the fecret enemy of his honour, but he found it fall locked as before. Not being able to comprehend any thing of this adventure, he called those of his people, who were nearest, and as he opened the door for that purpose, stood in the passage, and kept himself on his guard, that the person whom he sought might not escape.

Some fervants hearing his repeated cries, came running with lights: upon which he took a candle, and made a new fearch in the chamber sword in hand; but found no body, nor the least mark of any person's having been there. He did not even perceive the private door, nor the opening through which there was a palfage. He could not, however, blindfold himfelf, with regard to the circumstances of his misfortune, but remained in a strange confusion of thoughts. Should he have recourse to Blanch, she was too much concerned in the truth, for him to expect an explanation from her. He therefore resolved to go and open his heart to Leontio, after having dismiffed his servants, telling them, that he thought he had heard a noise in his chamber, but was miltaken. He met his father-in-law coming out of his apartment, at the diffurbance he had heard, and recounted to him what had happened, with all the marks of extreme agitation and protound grief.

Siffredi was surprized at the adventure, which, though it did not seem natural, he, nevertheless, believed; and thinking that the king's love was capable of any thing, was very much afflicted with that consideration. But, far from flattering the jealous suspicions of his son-inlaw, he represented to him, with an air of affurance, that the voice which he thought he heard, and the sword that was opposed to his could be no other than phantoms of an imagination missed by jealousy; for, it was impossible that any body could have gone into his daughter's chamber; that with regard to the melancholy which he had observed in his wife, it might be occasion'd by some indisposition; that honour ought not to be answerable for the viciflitudes of temper; that the change of condition in a girl used to live in solitude, who tees herfelf on a fudden delivered to a man, whom the has not had time to know and to love, might be the cause of those tears, fighs, and that fharp affliction, of which he complained; that love was not to be kindled in maidens of a noble birth, by any other means, than time and affiduity; for which reasons, he exhorted him to calm his disquiet, redouble his tenderness and care, in order to dispose Blanch to become more sensible of his merit : and intreated him to return to his chamber, being perfuaded that his uneafiness and diftrust were injuries done to the virtue of his wife.

The constable made no answer to the remonstrances of his father in-law; whether he really began to think that he might have been imposed upon by the disorder of his mind, or judged it a wifer course to dissemble than to undertake, in vain, to convince the old man of an event so void of all probability--he returned to his apartment, lay down by his wife, and tried to obtain. by fleep, some respite from his disquiet. Blanch, on her side, was not less uneasy than he: she had but too well heard that which alarmed her husband, and could not consider as an illusion an adventure, the secret and motives of which she knew -Surprized that Henriquez should seek to introduce himself into her apartment, after having fo folemnly pledged his faith to Constance, instead of approving or feeling the least glimpse of joy at this step, she looked upon it as a new outrage, and her heart was incenfed against him.

While the daughter of Siffredi, prejudiced against the young king, believed him the most unfaithful of men, that unhappy prince, more in love than ever, wished for an interview with Blanch, in order to encourage her against the appearances that condemned him. He would have come sooner to Belmont for that purpose, had he been permitted by the multiplicity of business in which he was necessarily engaged; and he could not steal away from court before that night. He was too well acquainted with all the private corners of a place where he had been educated, to be under any difficulty of getting unseen into Siffredi's caftle; and he still kept the key of a private door that belong'd to the garden. thro' which he got into his old apartment, from whence be pass'd into the chamber of Blanch.—You may imagine the altonishment of that prince when he found a man there, and felt a fword opposed to his own. He had well nigh discovered himself, and punished on the fpot the audacious wretch, who durft lift his facrilegious hand against his lawful king; but the respect he owed to Leontio's daughter, suspended his resentment. He retired in the same manner as he had entered, and, more afflisted than ever, took the road to Palermo; where he arriving some moments before day, he shut himself up in his apartment. But the agitation of his spirits depriving him of rest, he resolved to return to Belmont; his tafety, honour, and, above all his love, not permitting him to remain longer ignorant of the least circumstance of such a cruel adventure.

It was no fooner day than he commanded his huntingequipage to be got ready, and, under pretence of taking that diversion, rode far into the forest of Belmont, attended by his sportsmen and some courtiers. He followed the chace fome time, the better to conceal his defign; and when he faw every one eagerly engaged at the heels of the hounds, he separated himself from them, and, all alone, took his way to Leontio's castle. He was too we'l acquainted with the paths of the forest to lofe himself, and his impatience not permitting him to spare his horse, he in a little time over-run the distance that separated him from the object of his love. He was just inventing some plausible pretext to procure for himfelf a private interview with the daughter of Siffredi, when, croffing a small road that led to one of the parkgates, he perceived hard by two women, fitting in close conversation at the root of a tree. As he did not doubt that these persons belonged to the castle, the fight of them raifed within him some emotion: but he was much more transported, when, the women turning towards him at the noise of his horse's feet, he knew one of them to be his dear Blanch, who had escaped from the castle with with Nifa, one of her women, who enjoyed the greatest share of her confidence, to bewail her misfortune at full liberty.

He flew-he threw himself headlong (if I may use the expression) at her feet; and perceiving in her eyes all the marks of the most profound affliction, was melted at the fight. " Fair Blanch, (faid he) fuspend the emotions of your grief: appearances, I confess, represent me guilty to your eyes; but when you are made acquainted with the defign which I have formed in your behalf, that which you now look upon as a crime, will appear to you a proof of my innocence and excels of love." These words, which Henriquez thought capable of moderating, ferved only to redouble the affliction of Blanch, who would have answered him, had not her voice been choaked up with her fighs. The prince, astonished at her diforder, said, " How, madam, can't I, then, calm your disquiet? By what misfortune have I lott your confidence? I, who hazard my crown, and even my life, to keep mytelf yours !"-' I was then that the daughter of Siffredi, making an effort to explain herfelf, replied, " Sir, your promites are now unseafonable-Nothing henceforth can bind my destiny to yours." " Ah, Blanch ! (faid Henriquez, interrupting her with warmth) what cruel words are thefe I hear! Who dares ravish you from my love? Who dares oppose the fury of a king, who would put all Sicily in flames, rather than fuffer you to be torn from his hopes?"-" All your power, Sir, (answered Siffredi's daughter, in a languishing manner) cannot remove the obstacles by which we are feparated .- I am the constable's wife"-" The constable's wife!" (cried the prince, staggering backwards, and unable to go on.) He was confounded and overwhelmed by this unexpected blow: his thrength forfook him, and he dropt down at the root of a tree that grew behind him .- Pale, trembling, and depress'd. he had nothing free but his eyes, which he fixed upon Blanch, in such a manner as gave her to understand how deeply affected he was with the unhappy tidings she had declared. She, on the other hand, looked upon him with an air which convinced him, that her emotions were little different from those he selt; and these two unfortunate lovers preserved, between them, a silence that had something terrible in it. At length the prince, recollecting himself a little, by an effort of his courage, resumed the discourse, and said to Blanch with a sigh, "What have you done, madam? Your credulity has ruined me, and undone yourfelf."

60

Ы

Blanch, piqued at the prince's feeming to upbraid her, when the thought the had much more cause to complain of him, replied, " What, Sir! do you add dissimulation to infidelity? Would you have me discredit my own eves and ears, and believe you innocent, in spite of the evidence of my fenses? No, Sir, I own myself incapable of such an effort of reason."-" Nevertheles, madam, (answered the king) you are imposed upon by these very witnesses which seem so faithful: even they have affitted in betraying you; and that I am innocent and faithful, is no less true than that you are the constable's wife." " How, Sir! (faid she) did not I hear you confirm to Constance the present of your hand and heart? Have you not affured the nobles of the kingdom, that you would fulfil the conditions of the late king's will: and has not the princels received the homage of your new subjects, in quality of queen and spouse of Henriquez ? Were my eyes then bewitched ? Say, fay rather, unfaithful prince! that you did not think Blanch ought to ballance in your heart the interest of a throne; and, without stooping to feign a passion that you no longer feel, and perhaps never felt, confess that the crown of Sicily appeared to you more fixed with Conflance than with Leontio's daughter. You are in the right, Sir: a thining throne was no more my due than the heart of a prince, such as you are. I was too vain to pretend to either; but you ought not to have indulged me in my error-You know the alarms I felt on account of losing you; a misfortune that then seemed to me almost inevitable. Why did you encourage me with hope? Would to heaven my fears had not been diffipated! I should have accused fortune, not you; and you would have, at least, preserved my heart, tho' at the expence of a hand which no other should ever have obtained. It is now no time to justify yourself: I am the contlable's wife; and that I may spare myself the consequence consequence of a conversation, that makes my glory blush, give me leave, Sir, without sailing in that respect which I owe you, to quit the presence of a prince, whom I am no longer at liberty to hear."

So faying, the left Henriquez with as much hafte as her present weak condition would allow. " Stop, madam! (cried he) and do not drive to despair a prince, who will rather overturn that throne, which you upbraid him with having preferr'd to you, than fulfil the expectation of his new subjects." "That facrifice (faid Blanch) is at present vain. While I am married to the conflable, these generous transports will not avail : fince I am then no longer at liberty, it is of small importance to me that you reduce Sicily to ashes, or to whom you give your hand. If I have been weak enough to let my heart be furprized, I shall at least have fortitude enough to stifle its emotions, and let the new king of Sicily see, that the contable's wife is no longer the lover of prince Henriquez." When the pronounced thefe words, being close to the park gate, she entered it of a fudden with Nifa; and locking it on the other fide, left the prince overwhelmed with forrow. He could not recover the blow which Blanch had given him, by the account of her marriage. " Unjust Blanch! (cried he) you have loft all remembrance of our mutual engagement! In spite of our reciprocal vows, we are for ever parted; and the idea which I had cherished of possessing your charms, was no more than a vain illusion. Ah, cruel maid! how dearly did I buy your approbation of my flame !"

Then the image of his rival's happiness presented itself to his fancy, with all the horrors of jealousy; which took such full possession of his soul for some moments, that he was on the point of sacrificing the constable, and even Siffredi himself, to his resentment.—Reason however, by degrees, allayed the violence of his transports: but the impossibility he perceived of banishing from Blanch the impressions she retained of his insidelity, threw him again into despair.—He slattered himself with the hopes of essacing them, provided he could converse with her at liberry; for which purpose, judging it necessary to remove the constable, he resolved to have him apprehended, as a person suspected of designs against the state. He accordingly charged with this office the captain of his guards, who, repairing to Belmont, secured his person in the twilight, and brought him pri-foner to the castle of Palermo.

This incident filled all Belmont with consternation. Siffiedi fet out immediately to offer himfelf to the king, as security for his son-in-law, and to represent the troublesome consequences of such an arrest. The prince, who expected this step of his minister, and who was refolved, at all events to obtain a free interview with Blanch, before the conftable should be released, had exprefly ordered that no person whatever should speak with him till next day. But Leontio, notwithstanding this order, finding means to get access to the king's chamber, presented himself before him, saying, " Sir, if a loyal and respectful subject may be allowed to complain of his master, I am come to complain of you to yourfelf. -- What crime hasmy fon in-law committed? Has your majefty duly reflected on the eternal reproach you have fixed upon my family; and on the confequences of an imprisonment, which may allienate from your fervice the hearts of those who fill the most important posts of the realm?" " I have certain intelligence, (replied the king) that the constable carries on a criminal correspondence with the infant Don Pedro." " Criminal correspondence! (cried Leontio, with surprize) do not believe it. - Your majesty is imposed upon: treason never entered the family of Siffredi; and the constable's being my fon-in-law, is enough to screen him from all suspicion-The constable is innocent; but other fecret views have induced you to arrest him."

"Since you talk to me so freely, (replied the king) I will speak to you in the same manner.—You complain of the constable's being imprison'd: what! have I not more cause to complain of your cruelty? 'Tis you, barbarous Siffredi! who have robbed me of my quiet, and reduced me, by your officious cares, to a condition that makes me envy the lowest of mankind. But don't flatter yourself that I will enter into your schemes:— my marriage with Constance is resolved upon in vain."

"How, Sir! (cried Leontio, trembling) can you resuse.

ment

refuse to marry the princess, after having flattered her with that hope before your whole people." " If I deceive their expectation, (replied the king) ascribe it solely to yourfelf. Why did you lay me under a necessity of promifing that which I could not perform? Who compelled you to fill a paper, which I gave your daughter, with the name of Constance? You was not ignorant of my intention. - You tyrannized over the heart of Blanch, in making her marry a man whom the did not love. But what right had you to dispote of mine, in favour of a prince s whom I hate? --- Have you forgot that she is the daughter of that cruel Mathilda, who, trampling under her feet all the ties of blood and humanity, made my father breathe his last, under all the rigours of captivity? And shall I espouse her? No, Siffredi! lay afide that hope. Before you fee the torch of these direful nuptials lighted, you will see all Sicily in flames, and its ashes quenched in blood!"

" What do I hear! (cried Leontio) Ah, Sir! what a prospect have you shewn me? What terrible threats! -But I am unseasonably alarmed, (added he, in another tone) you love your subjects too well, to entail upon them fuch misery. You will not allow yourself to be overcome by love .--- You will not tarnish your virtues with the weaknesses of ordinary men. If I have beflowed my daughter on the constable, it was done, Sir, with a view of acquiring for your majefly a valiant subject, who can support with his arm, and the troops which are at his disposal, your interest against that of the prince Don Pedro. I thought that in attaching him to my family, by fuch intimate ties --- " " Ha! thefe are the ties, (cried the prince Henriquez) these are the fatal ties that have undone me! Cruel friend! why did you inflict fuch a heavy stroke upon me? Did I order you to manage my concerns at the expence of my heart? Why did you not leave me to support my rights by myfelf? Did I want courage to reduce those who should rebel against me? I should have known how to punish the constable, had he disobeyed me. I know that kings ought not to be tyrants, and that the happiness of their people should be their chief aim; but must they therefore be the flaves of their subjects, and, from the mo-

entir

fly,

liber

him tied

of w

to t

mer

cha

ed

app

he

fau

tiv

the

WO

to

or hi

qu

ar

g

t

f

ment that heaven chooses them to govern, lose the right that nature grants to all men, of disposing their affections as they please? Ah! if they must not enjoy the privilege of the lowest class of mortals, take back, Siffredi, that sovereign power which you would confirm at the expence of my repose."

You know very well, Sir, (replied the minister) that your marriage with the princess was, by the late king, made the condition of your succession to the crown."-" And what right (answered Henriquez) had he to establish that disposition? Had he received fuch an unworthy law, when he succeeded to his brother king Charles? And how came you to be so weak as to submit to the unjust condition? For an high chancellor, methinks, you are very ill informed of our cuftoms. In a word, the' I have promised my hand to Constance, it was not a voluntary engagement, therefore I do not intend to keep my word; and if Don Pedro, from my refusal, conceives the hope of mounting my throne, without engaging the people in a quarrel, which might cost too much blood, let the sword decide, in fingle combat, which of us is most worthy to reign." Leontio, not daring to urge him any farther, contented himself with asking, on his knees, the enlargment of his fon-in-law, which he obtained --- " Go, (said the king to him) return to Belmont, whither the constable will foon follow you." The minister went away, and got back to Belmont, persuaded that his son in-law would not be long behind him. But in this he was mistaken: Henriquez resolved to see Blanch that night, and therefore deferr'd the release of her husband till next day.

Mean while the constable was tortured with the most cruel resections: his imprisonment had opened his eyes, with regard to the true cause of his missortune: he therefore abandoned himself entirely to his jealousy; and renouncing the allegiance he had hitherto so commendably preserved, breathed nothing but vengeance. As he concluded that the king would not fail of being with Blanch that night, in order to surprize them together, he begged the governor of the castle of Palermo to let him go out, assuring him that he would return to prison next morning before day. The governor, who was entirely atirely devoted to him, consented to this the more eafly, as he knew that Siffredi had already obtained his fiberty, and even furnished him with a horse to carry him to Belmont; where the constable being arrived, he tied his horse to a tree, entered the park by a little door, of which he had the key, and was so lucky as to get into the castle unperceived. He went straight to the apartment of his wise, and concealing himself in an antichamber behind a screen, which he found there, proposed to observe from thence all that should pass, and to appear suddenly in Blanch's chamber, at the least noise he should hear.— While he was in this situation, he saw Nisa come out from her mistress, and retire to the closet where she lay.

Siffredi's daughter, who had eafily discerned the motive of her husband's imprisonment, concluded that he would not return that night to Belmont, altho' her father had told her, the king affured him the constable would fet out soon after him. She did not doubt that Henriquez would take the advantage of that conjuncture to vifit and converte with her at liberty; and in this opinion she waited for the prince, in order to reproach. him with an action which might have terrible confequences, in regard to her. - Accordingly, in a little time after Nifa had withdrawn, the partition opened, and the king came and threw himself at Blanch's feet. faying, " Madam, do not condemn before you have given me the bearing: if I have ordered the constable to be imprisoned, confider that it was the only means I had left to justify myself; therefore impute that artifice to yourfelf alone. Why did you, this morning, refuse to hear me? Alas! to morrow your husband will be enlarged, and I shall never have an opportunity of speaking to you again. Hear me, then, for this last time: - if the loss of you makes me the most forlorn of mankind, at least grant me the melancholy consolation of convincing you, that my infidelity is not the cause of my misfortune; for tho' I confirmed to Constance the offer of my hand, it was what I could not dispense with doing in the fituation to which your father had reduced me. There was a necessity for my deceiving the princess, for your interest as well as my own, in order

obf

fro

46

Bla

rig

arr

mi

lef

fre

lo

in

th

it

fh

re

fu

en

ta

to

ft

C

٧

ł

order to secure to you the crown as well as the person of your lover. This I flattered myself with accomplishing, and had already taken measures to break that fatal engagement; but you have destroyed my plan, and, by giving yourself away too inconsiderately, laid up a sund of eternal forrow for two hearts, which might have been rendered happy by the most inviolable love!"

He ended this complaint with fuch visible marks of real despair, that Blanch was touched with his condition, and no longer doubted his innocence, which at first gave her some joy; but afterwards, stung with the confideration of her misfortune; " Ah, Sir! (said she to the prince) after the cruel determination of our fate. you increase my affliction by letting me know that you were not guilty! What have I done? Unfortunate that Lam! my refentment has betrayed me! I thought myfelf abandoned, and in revenge accepted of the conftable's hand, which was presented by my father! I am guilty of the crime, and have been the cause of our mutual mishap! Alas! while I accused you of having deceived me, it was I, too credulous lover! It was I who broke those bonds which ! had sworn to keep for ever inviolate! Revenge yourfelf, Sir, in your turn. Hate the ungrateful Blanch :- forget her." " Ah, madam! (faid Henriquez, interrupting her with a melancholy air) how shall I find means to tear from my heart a passion, which even your injustice cannot entinguish!" "You must however. Sir, make that effort ;" (replied Siffredi's daughter, fighing.) "What! are you capable of that effort yourself?" (said the king.) cannot promife to succeed; (answered she) but I will fpare no pains in the endeavour." " Ah, cruel Blanch! (said the prince) you will easily forget Henriquez, since you are able to form such a design !" " And what can you expect? (replied she, in a more resolute tone) Do you flatter yourself, that I will allow you to continue your addresses? No, Sir, abandon that hope. Though I was not born to be a queen, heaven never formed me to listen to dishonourable love. My husband, as well as you, Sir, is descended from the noble house of Anjou; and if my duty did not raise an insurmountable obstacle obstacle to your gallantry, my glory would hinder me from enduring it: I conjure you therefore, to retire." "Heavens! what barbarity! (replied the king) Ah, Blanch! is it possible that you should treat me with such rigour? You do not think then, that your being in the arms of the constable, is enough to overwhelm me? you must also forbid me your fight, the only consolation I had left!" " Fly me, rather (answered the daughter of Siffredi, shedding some tears) the fight of what one tenderly loves, ceases to be pleasing, when the hope of possessing it is loft. Adieu, Sir! Fly from me. You owe that effort to your own glory and my reputation. it also, for my quiet: for in short, although my virtue should not be alarmed by the emotions of my heart, the remembrance of your tenderness, will entail upon me fuch cruel conflicts, that I shall scarce have thrength enough to maintain them."

She pronounced these words so passionately, that she unwittingly overturned a candleflick which flood on a table behind her; and the candle going out in falling, she took it up in order to light it again, for which purpose, the opened the door of the antichamber, and went to the closet of Nisa, who was not yet gone to bed. The king, who waited for her return, no sooner saw her approach with the light, than he made preffing inflances to her, that she would suffer his attachment. The constable hearing the prince's voice, rushed into the chamber fword in hand, almost at the same time his wife entered, and advancing towards Henriquez with all the refentment that his rage inspired, " This is too much, tyrant ! (cried he) don't think that I am so base as to endure the affront thou hast done my honour." " Traitor, (replied the king, putting himself into a posture of defence) don't imagine that thou art able to execute thy defign with impunity." With these words they began a combat which was too furious to last long: the constable fearing that Siffredi and his fervants, alarmed at the cries of Blanch, would foon come and oppose his vengeance, fought without caution. His rage divested him of all judgment; he took his measures so ill, that he run upon his adversary's sword, which encered his body to the hilt, and the moment he fell, the king checked his indigna-

Leontio's daughter touched with the condition in which she saw her husband, and surmounting the natural reluctance she had for him, threw herself on the floor, and supported him with the moste eager concern. But that unbappy spoule was too much prepossessed against her. to be affected with their expressions of her grief and compassion. Death, whose approaches he selt, could not suppress the transports of his jealousy; he saw nothing in his last moments, but the happiness of his rival, and the idea appeared so horrid, that recollecting all the strength he had left, he lifted the sword which was still in his hand, and plunged it in the breast of Blanch. " Die, (said he, while he stabbed her) die, unfaithful woman, fince the ties of marriage have been too weak to preferve that faith which you swore to me at the altar! And thou, Henriquez, (added he) boast not of thy fate. Thou canst not enjoy my missortune, and therefore I die fatisfied." Having spoke thus, he expired, and his countenance, covered as it was with the shades of death. still retained fomething fierce and terrible. That of Blanch presented quite a different spectacle. The blow she received was mortal; she fell upon the body of her dying spouse, and the blood of this innocent victim was mixed with that of her murderer, who had executed his cruel resolution so suddenly, that the king had not time to prevent its effects.

The unfortunate prince seeing Blanch fall, uttered a loud cry, and more consounded than she with the blow that robbed her of life, hastened to give her the same succour that she had offered to the constable. But she said, with a saultering voice, "Sir, you may spare yourself the trouble. I am the victim which unpitied fate demands: may it appease the wrath of heaven, and secure the happiness of your reign". As she pronounced these words, Leontio, brought thither by her cries, entered the chamber, and struck with the objects that presented themselves to his eyes, became motionless where he stood; while Blanch, without perceiving him, continuing to speak to the king, said, "Adieu, prince, cherish my memory. My love and missortune claim that savour.

vour. Entertain no resentment against my sather. Comfort his age and sorrow, and do justice to his zeal. Above all, make my innocence known. This is what I recommend to you more than any thing. Adieu, my dear Henriquez—I die—eceive my last breath."

So faying, the expired; and the king having kept a. melancholy filence for some time, said to Siffredi, who was overwhelmed with woe, " Behold, Leontio, contemplate your own work, and in this tragical event, confider the fruit of your own officious care and zeal for me!"-- The old man was to penetrated with forrow, that he made no reply——But why should I pretend to de cribe those things which no language can express? Let it suffice to say, that both uttered the moth moving complaints, as foon as the greatness of their af-The king all fliction allowed them the use of speech. his life preserved the most tender remembrance of his mistress, and could never be prevailed upon to marry Constance, who being joined by the infant Don Pedro, they spared nothing to avail themselves of Roger's last will: but they were obliged to yield to prince Henriquez, who subdued all his enemics. As for Siffredi, the grief he felt for having been the cause of so many missortunes, detached him from the world, and rendered his native country insupportable to him: he therefore abandoned Sicily, and croffing over into Spain, with Portia, the only child he had left, purchased this castle, where he lived near fifteen years after Blanch's death, and had the comfort before he died, of feing Portia fettled: she married Don Jerome de Silva, and I am the only fruit of that marriage. This (added the widow of Don Pedro de Pinares) is the history of my family, and a faithful account of the misfortunes represented in that picture, which my grandfather, Leontio, ordered to be drawn as a monument of that fatal adventure to his posterity.

CHAP. V. The behaviour of Aurora de Guzman, at Salamanca.

ORTIZ, her companions, and I, having heard this relation, withdrew, and left Aurora with Elvira in the hall, where they spent the rest of the day in conver-Vol. II. fation. Far from being tired with one another, next day when we set out, they were as much affected at parting, as two friends who have long lived agreeably together.

At last we arrived (without meeting any bad accident) at Salamanca'*, where we immediately took a house ready furnished, and Dame Ortiz, as we had concerted it, assumed the name of Donna Kimena de Guzman. She had been too long a duenna not to be a good actress; accordingly, going out one morning with Aurora, a wairing-maid, and valet, she repaired to a house where lodgings were let, and where we understood, Pacheco usually lived. Having asked if they had an apartment to be let, they answered in the affirmative, and shewed her into one pretry handsomely surnished, which she hired immediately, giving earnest to the landlady, and telling her, that it was designed for one of her nephews who was coming from Toledo, to study at Salamanca, and would arrive that very day.

I he duenna and my mittret's having secured this lodging, went home again, and the fair Aurora, without lofing time, transformed herfelf into a cavalier; covering her black hair with a light-coloured tour, painting her eve-brows of the fame complexion, and adjusting herfelf in fuch a manner as that the might very well pass for a young nobleman. Her carriage was tree and eafy, and excepting her face, which was a little too handsome for a man, nothing could possibly betray her disguise: her maid, who was to ferve in quality of a page, took the drefs alfo, and we were under no apprehension of her ill acting, for the had a good modest affurance in her air, which was very well adapted for the part she was to play. In the afternoon these two actresses being in a condition to appear on the stage, that is, in the lodging which had been taken, I accompanied them thi-

The landlady, whose name was Bernarda, Ramirez, received us with great civility, and conducted us to our ther in a coach, with all the baggage we should have occafion for.

^{*} Salamanca is one of the largest cities in Spain, situated on the banks of the river Tormes in the kingdom of Leon, and samous for its university.

While

apartment, where we began to enter into conversation, and agreed with her for our board by the month. Then asking if she had a good many boarders, she replied, " I have none at present. I might have abundance if I would take all forts of people; but I receive none but young noblemen; and I expect one this evening, who comes from Madrid to finish his studies. His name is Don Lewis de Pacheco; perhaps you may have heard of him." " No, (faid Aurora) I know nothing of him, and you will oblige me by letting me know what fort of a man be is, fince I am to lodge in the same house with him." " Sir, (answered the landlady, looking at this false cavalier) he is quite a fine figure, and pretty much of your own make. Ah! how happy you will be in one another ! By St Jago, I may boast of having at my house two of the most handsome noblemen in Spain." " This Don Lewis (replied my Mittress) has doubtless a thoufand love-intrigues in Salamanca?" " Yes, I'll affure you, (faid the old woman) he is a brifk gallant, upon my word. He has no more to do, but shew himself and conquer; and among others, he has quite captivated a lady of youth and beauty, whose name is Isabella, an old lawyer's daughter, who is fond of him to diftraction." " And tell me, good mother, (cried Aurora, interrupting her with precipitation) is he as much in love with her?" " He was, (replied Bernarda Ramirez) before his departure for Madrid; but I know not if he retains his passion for her still; for in these points he is not much to be depended upon; but fkips from woman to woman, as all young gentlemen ufually do."

The good widow had scarce done speaking, when hearing a noise in the court-yard, we looked through the window, and perceived two men alighting from their horses: these were no other than Don Lewis de Pachece himself, arrived just from Madrid, with his valet de chambre. Upon which the old woman left us, in order to receive him, and my mistress prepared herself (not without emotion) to play the part of Don Felix. Don Lewis, in a short time, entered our apartment in his boots, and saluted Aurora, saying. "Understanding that a young nobleman of Toledo is a lodger here, I beg leave to express my joy in having him for a companion"

While my mistress returned this compliment, Pacheco seemed surprized to see such an amiable cavalier; and could not help telling her, that he had never before beheld any man so handsome and genteely made. A great many civilities passed on both sides, after which Don yo

in

ci

..

th

W

n

m

21

Oi is

tì

n

fe

P

Lewis retired to the apartment alloted for him.

While he was shifting and dressing, a fort of page who wanted to deliver a letter to him, meeting Aurora on the stair-case by accident, mistook her for Don Lewis, and giving her the billet, said, "Signior cavalier though I have never before seen Signior Pacheco, I believe I need not ask if you are he; being persuaded that I am not mistaken." "No, friend, (replied my mistress, with admirable presence of mind) you are assuredly not mistaken; and you acquit yourself of your commission surprisingly well. I am Don Lewis de Pacheco; you may return; and I will take care to send an answer very soon. The page disappearing, Aurora shut herself up with her maid and me, and opening the letter, read these words

"WITH what joy did I receive the news of your arrival at Salamanca! my transport had well inigh got the better of my reason!---But is Isabella till dear to you? Make haste, and assure her in person of your constancy: though she will teare be able to support the pleasure of finding you unchanged!"

"This billet, (said Aurora) proclaims the violence of the author's passion; and the lady is a rival not to be contemned. I must spare nothing to detach Don Lewis from her, and even to hinder him from seeing her: the undertaking, I own, is difficult; but nevertheless, I don't despair of success." Accordingly my mistress having mused a minute or two, added, "I'll engage there shall be a breach between them in less than four and twenty hours. Pacheco having taken a little repose in his own apartment, returned to ours, and renewed his conversation with Aurora before supper. "Signior cavalier, (said he to her with an air of pleasantry) I believe the husbands and lovers will have no cause to rejoice at your arrival in Salamanca: but rather have reason to be uneasy:

easy: as for my own part, I tremble for my conquests."
"Harkee, (answered my mistress, in the same tone) your fear is not ill grounded: Don Felix de Mendoza is a formidable man, I assure you. I have been in this country before, and know that the women here are not insensible: about a month ago in my way through this city, I stopt here eight days, and I will tell you in confidence, that I inflamed an old lawyer's daughter.

I perceived Don Lewis disordered at these words. " May one, without being thought impertinent, (faid he) alk the lady's name?" " How! without being thought impertment! (cried the pretended Don Felix) why should I make a mystery of it to you? D'ye think me more referved than other noblemen of my age? You must not do me such injustice. Besides, between you and me, the object does not deferve such delicacy. She's only a pitiful citizen; and a man of quality you know, is never feriously engrossed by such Abigails; but thinks he does them an honour in debauching them. therefore, without ceremony, acquaint you with the name of the lawyer's daughter, which is Itabella." " And the lawyer, (cried Pacheco, interrupting her with impatience) is not he called Signior Murcia de la Lianna?" " The very same (replied my mistres) here is a letter which I received from her just now. You may read it, and fee whether or not the lady has a kindness for me. Don Lewis casting his eyes over the billet, knew the hand, and was struck dumb with confusion. " What is the matter? (added Aurora, with an air of assonishment) you change colour! I believe, (God forgive me!) that you have some concern in this lady. Ah! how vexed am I for having spoke of her so freely!"

"I think myself obliged to you for your information, (said Don Lewis, in a transport of anger and distain) Persidious, sickle creature! Don Felix, I am bound to you for ever. You have extricated me out of an error, in which I might have remained a long time. I thought myself beloved. Beloved, did I say? I be ieved myself adored by that I sabella. I had, indeed, some regard for the creature; but now I see she is a coquet who deserves nothing but contempt." "I applaud your resentment, (said Aurora, seigning indignation in her turn) a lawyer's daughter

N 3

daughter ought to think herself very happy in having fuch an accomplished nobleman as you for her lover. Her inconstancy is inexculable; and far from accepting the facrifice the makes of you, I intend to punish her by flighting her favours." " For my part, (replied Pacheco) the only vengeance I shall take, is never to see her again." "You are in the right (cried the false Mendoza;) nevertheless, that she may know how much we both despise her, I think each of us should write to her an infulting Letter, which I will inclose in one paper, and fend an answer to this her billet. But before we proceed to this extremity, confult your heart. Perhaps, you will one day, repent of having broke with Ifabella." " No, no, (said Don Lewis) I shall never be fo weak; and in the mean time, consent to mortify the ungrateful creature as you have proposed."

I was accordingly fent for paper, pen and ink, and both of them, fet about composing very obliging letters for the daughter of doctor Murcia de Lianna. Pacheco, in particular, could not find terms strong enough to express his resentments, and tore five or six half-finished billets, because he thought they were not sufficiently severe.

One, however, he was satisfied with at last; and no doubt he had reason so to be; for it contained these words: " Learn to know yourfelf, my princefs, and be " no longer so vain as to believe that I love you. If I be captivated, it must be with other kind of merit than " yours, which is scarce sufficient to amuse me for a moment; and only calculated for diverting the mean-" est scholars of the university." --- This courteous letter being written, and Aurora having finished her's, which was not a whit milder; she sealed them both, and inclosing them together, gave me the packet, faying, " There Gil Blas, be sure to deliver this to Isabella, this evening. You understand me, (added she, tipping me the wink) the meaning of which I could easily comprehend." "Yes, Sir, (answered I) the thing shall be done to your wish."

At the same time, I went out, and being in the street, said to myselt, "Oho! Gil Blas, then it seems, you play the valet in this sarce. Well, friend, shew that you have wit enough to perform such a fine part. Signior

Don

d

h

Don Felix, (as you see) depends so much on your understanding, that he contents himself with giving you a sign only. Is he to blame for that? No. I conceive his meaning: he desires that I should deliver the billet of Don Lewis only. That is the interpretation of the sign, than which nothing could be more intelligible. I did not hesitate in opening the packet, from which I took Pacheco's letter, and carried it to the house of doctor Murcia, having soon informed myself whereabouts he lived. Finding the little page who had been at our lodgings, at the door; Brother, (said I) don't you serve the daughter of Mr. doctor Murcia? When he answered in the affirmative, "You have such an obliging physiognomy, (I replied) that I take the liberty to desire you will deliver a love-letter to your mistress."

The page asked from whom I brought it; and I no sooner told him that it came from Don Lewis de Pacheco, than he faid, "Since it is so, follow me, I have orders to bring you in. Itabella wants to talk with you." I allowed myself, therefore, to be introduced into a clofer, where I did not stay long before the lady appeared; and I was struck with the beauty of her face, having never beheld more delicate features. Her air was affected and childish: but for all that she had walked without leading-strings, for thirty good years at least. " Friend. (faid she to me, with a smiling air) do you belong to Don Lewis de Pacheco?" I answered, that I had been his valet de chambre these three weeks, and then delivered the fatal letter, which she read over twice or thrice, and feemed to diffrust the evidence of her own It is very certain the expected nothing lets than fuch an answer. She lifted up her eyes towards heaven, bit her lips, and for fome time discovered by her countenance, the pangs which her heart indured. Then all of a fudden, addressing herself to me, " Friend, (said she) is Don Lewis run mad? Tell me, if you know, why he writes to me in this gallant, it yle. What dæmon possesses him? If he had a mind to break with me, could he not have done it without affronting me with such an abufive letter ?"

"Madam, (said I) my master is certainly to blame; but he was in some measure forced to it. If you will N 4 promise to keep the secret, I will discover the whole mystery." " I do promise; (said she interrupting me with precipitation) don't be afraid of my exposing you, but freely explain yoursels." "Well then, (I resumed) this is briefly, the affair. Immediately after he had received your letter, a lady, covered with a very thick veil, came to our lodging, and asking for Signior de Pachecho, spoke with him in private a good while; and towards the close of the conversation, I overheard her fay to him, " You swear to me that you will never see her again: but that is not all---- You must also, for my fatisfaction, this instant, write to her a billet which I will dictate, and this I exact of you." Don Lewis did as the defired, then putting the letter into my hand, " Enquire, (said he) where Doctor Murcia de Lianna lives, and convey, with address, this paper to his daughter Isabella."

So that you fee, Madam, (added I) this disobliging letter is the work of a rival, and consequently, my master is not so much to blame. " O heaven ! (cried she) he is more so than I imagined! His infidelity injures me more than the spiteful words which his hand wrote. Ah, the perfidious wretch! he has entered into other engagements-But (added she, assuming a lofty air) let him abandon himself to his new flame without conftraint. I don't intend to thwart him. Tell him, that he had no occasion to insult me, in order to make me leave the field free to my rival; and that I despise such a fickle lover too much, to have the least defire of recalling him." So faying, she dismissed me, and retired very much irritated against Don Lewis; while I went away very well fatisfied with myfelf, and perfuaded that if I should fet up for a genius, I should soon become a most dexterous cheat-I returned to our lodgings, where I found Mendoza and Pacheco at Supper, converfing together as if they had been old acquaintance. Aurora, perceiving by my chearful countenance, that I had not acquitted myfelfill of my commission; " So, thou art returned, Gil Blas, (faid she) give us an account of thy meffage." Being obliged to truft to my own fineffe again, I told them that I had delivered the packet with my own hand; and that Isabella, after having read the tv

di

fe

n

0

0

two billets doux which it contained, instead of seeming disconcerted, fell a laughing like one who had lost her fenles; faying, " Upon my conscience, young noblemen have an admirable style! It must be owned, that other people don't write half so agreeably " " A fine way of diffembarrating herself! (cried my mistress) the must certainly be a finished coquet." " As for me (said Don Lewis) I should never know Isabella by such behaviour: the must have entirely changed her character during my absence." I could not have thought her such a person. indeed, (replied Aurora) but we must allow that there ate women who can assume a great many different shapes: I was once in love with one of these, who made me her dupe a long time: Gil Blas, you can tell that she had an air of virtue, which might have deceived the whole world." "Yes, truly, (faid I, mingling in the conversation) she had a look that would have decoyed the most wary. I, myself, might have been trapanned by it."

The pretended Mendoza and Pacheco burst into a loud laugh, on hearing me talk thus: one, because I bore witness against an imaginary lady; and the other, on account of the expression I had used. We continued discoursing of women who have the art of dissembling; and the result of our conversation was, that Isabella was accused in due form, and convicted of being an arrant iilt.

Don Lewis protested anew, that he would never fee her, and Don Felix, by his example, swore he would always have the most perfect contempt for her. After these protestations, they professed a mutual friendship, and promifed to conceal nothing from one another. Supper being over, they proceeded to compliments; and at last, parted to go to bed, each in his own apartment. I followed Aurora to her's, where I gave an exact account of the conversation I had with the doctor's daughter; not forgetting the least circumstance. I thought the would have embraced me in the transport of her joy. " Dear Gil Blas, (faid she) I am charmed with thy understanding! When one is so unfortunate as to be engaged in a passion which compels us to have recourse to stratagems; it is a great advantage to have in our in-NS terests, such a sensible young fellow as thee. Courage, my friend; we have removed a rival who might have given us a world of trouble. That is no bad prognostic: but as lovers are subject to strange relapses, I think we must make a strong push, and bring Aurora de Guzman on the stage to-morrow." I approved of the scheme, and leaving Signior Don Felix with his page, retired to bed.

CHAP. VI. The stratagems practifed by Aurora, to captivate Don Lewis de Pacheco.

HE two new friends meeting next morning, began the day with embraces, which Aurora was obliged to give and receive, in order to act the part of Don Felix. They went out to walk, and I accompanied them with Chilindron, the valet of Don Lewis; when stopping at the university, to look at the titles of books that were pasted on the gate, which a good many people amused themselves in reading, I perceived a little man among them, who gave his opinion of all the different works that were so published I observed that he was heard with great attention, which I fancied at the same time, he believed was no more than his due; for he feemed vain and positive, as little men commonly are. "That new translation of Horace, (said he) which you fee advertised in such large characters, is a work in profe, composed by an old college author; -a book in great efteem among the fludents, who have already confumed four editions of it: and yet there is not one man of tafte who has purchased so much as a single copy." His judgment was not a whit more favourable for the other books, which he ridiculed without exception. So that in all likelihood, he was an author himtelf. I should not have been tired of hearing him to an end; but was obliged to follow Don Lewis and Don Felix, who being as little pleased with his discourse, as interested in the books which he censured, lest him to the enjoyment of his own criticism.

We came home at dinner-time, and my mistress sitting down at table with Pacheco, artfully turned the conversation conversation on her own family. " My father (said she) is a cadet of the house of Mendoza, and tettled at Toledo: my mother is fister to Donna Kimena de Guzman, who came to Salamanca some days ago, on an affair of importance, with her niece Aurora, the only daughter of Don Vincent de Guzman, whom, perhaps, you know." " No, (replied Don Lewis) but I have often heard of him, as well as of your coufin Aurora. Am I to believe what is reported of her? I have been affured that nothing equals her understanding but her beauty." " As for understanding (resumed Don Felix) she has a pretty good share, and that well cultivated: but I don't think her so very handsome. People tay that she and I very much resemble one another." " If that be the case, (cried Pacheco) she deserves the reputation she has got: your features are regular; your cousin must be qui e enchanting. I wish I had an opportunity of feeing and converfing with her." " I undertake to fatisfy your curiofity, replied the pretended Mendoza) and will carry you to my aunt's house this very afternoon." My mistress, all of a sudden changed the discourse, and talked on indifferent subjects-After dinner, while they were preparing to go and visit Donna Kimena, I was beforehand with them, and ran to advertise the duenna, that she might be ready to receive them; then returning instantly. accompanied Don Felix, who conducted Don Lewis to the house of his aunt. But they had scarce entered the house, when they met Dame Kimena, who desired them by a fign to make a noise. " Hush, hush, (said she, with a low voice) you will wake my niece who has been tormented fince yesterday, with a terrible head ach, which has just left her, and the poor child has been afleep about a quarter of an hour." " I am forry for this disappointment, said Mendoza;) I was in good hopes of teeing my coufin, and had promifed that pleafure to my friend Pacheco." " The affair is not very urgent, (replied Ortiz, smiling) you may defer it till tomorrow." The cavaliers converted a little while with the old gentlewoman, and then retired.

Don Lewis carried us to the house of one of his friends, a gentleman, whose name was Don Gabriel de Pedros, with whom we spent the rett of the day, supped, and did not think of coming home till two o'clock in the morning. We had got about half way, when we flumbled over two men lying thretched on the ground. Thinking they were unfortunate people who had been affassinated, we stopt to give them assistance, provided it was not too late; and as we endeavoured to inform ourselves of their condition, as well as the darkness of the night would allow, the patrole came up; and the commander taking us at first for the murderers, ordered his men to furround us; but he conceived a more favourable opinion of our morals, when he heard us speak, and by the help of a dark lanthorn, faw the faces of Mendoza and Pacheco. His foldiers being ordered to examine the condition of the two men, who we fancied, had been flain, found that it was a fat licentiate, with his man, both in liquor, or rather dead drunk. "Gentlemen, (cried one of the guard) I know this epicure, it is Signior the licentiate Guyomar, rector of our university: notwithstanding the pickle you see him in now, he is a great man, a wonderful genius! There is not a philosopher in Salamanca whom he cannot confute in an argument. He has an unparalleled flow of words: 'tis a pity that he is a little addicted to lawfuits, the bottle, and a wench. He was, no doubt, on his return from supping with his Isabella, where unluckily his man getting as drunk as himfelf, they both have tumbled into the kennel. Before the good licentiate was rector, this misfortune happened frequently to him: and you fee, honours don't always change the man." We left those drunkards in the hands of the patrole, who undertook to carry them home, and returning to our lodgings, every one went to rest.

Don Felix and Don Lewis, getting up about noon, Aurora was the first subject of their discourse. "Gil Blas, (said my mistress to me) go to my aunt Donna Kimena, and ask if Signior Pacheco and I can have the pleasure of seeing my cousin to day." I went out to acquit myself of this commission, or rather to concert with the Duenna what was to be done: and when we had taken our measures, I returned to the salse Mendoza, saying, "Signior, your cousin Aurora is surprisingly well, and charged me to assure you from her, that your visit will be very agreeable; and Donna Kimena bid me assure Signior Pacheco that he shall always be welcome at her house on your account."

I perceived that Don Lewis was mightily pleafed with these last words: my mistress observed the same, and drew a happy prefage from her remark. Immediately before dinner, Signiora Kimena's valet appeared, and faid to Don Felix, " Signior, a man from Toledo has been enquiring for you at your aunt's house, and left this note." The pretended Mendoza opened it, and read aloud these words; " If you are desirous of hearing " news from your father, and of being made acquaint-" ed with other things of consequence to you, fail not, " on receipt of this, to repair to the black horse near " the university."-" I am, (said he) too curious to hear the things of confequence, not to fatisfy my defire instantly. Without taking leave of you, Pacheco (added he) if I don't return in two hours, you may go by yourfelf to my aunt's, and I will come to you there, after dinner. You know what Gil Blas has told you from Donna Kimena, and you have a right to make the vifit." So faying, he went out, and ordered me to follow him.

You may easily guess, that instead of going to the Black. Horse, we took the road to the house where Ortiz lived, where, as foon as we arrived, Aurora took off her fair-coloured tour, washed and rubbed her eye-brows, dreffed herself like a woman, and became a very handfome black-eyed lady, as the naturally was: for her difguise had changed her so much, that Aurora and Don Felix appeared to be two different people. She even feemed to be a great deal taller, as a woman than as a man, to which, indeed, her shoe heels, that were excelfively high, contributed not a little. When she had improved her charms with all the affifiance that art could bellow, the expected Don Lewis with an agitation composed of hope and fear. Sometimes she confided in her beauty and wit, and fometimes was alraid that her attempt would be unsuccessful. Ortiz, on the other side, fummoned all her finesse to second my mistres; and I, that Pacheco might not fee me in the house, like those players who appear only in the last act, concealed myself 'till towards the end of the vifit, by going out as foonas I had dined.

In short, every thing was in order when Don Lewis ar-He was received in a very agreeable manner, by lady Kimena, and enjoyed a convertation with Aurora two or three hours long; at the end of which, I came into the room where they were, and addressing myself to the cavalier, " Signior, (faid I) my master, Don Felix, cannot be here to day: but begs you will excuse him, because he is in company with three men from Toledo. of whom he cannot disengage himself." " Ah, the little rake! (cried Donna Kimena) he is certainly fet in for hard drinking" "No, madam, (I replied,) they are discoursing together of very lerious affairs. He is heartily forry that he cannot wait upon you; and ordered me to make his apology to you and Donna Autora," " O! I'll have none of his apologies; (faid my mistres) he knows I have been indisposed, and ought to shew a little more concern for his relation. In order to punish him for his indifference, he shan't see me these fitteen days." " Ah madam! (faid Don Lewis) do not form fuch a cruel resolution: Don Felix is rather to be pitied for not being able to vifit you."

They diverted themselves for some time with this subject, and then Pacheco withdrew. The fair Aurora immediately transformed herfelf, and refuming the appearance of a cavalier, returned to the lodgings as foon as the could. " I alk pardon, my dear friend, (laid she to Don Lewis) for failing to meet you at my aunt's, but I could not get rid of the people in whose company I was: what conscles me for the disappointment, is, that you have at least, had leiture to fatisfy your curiofity. Weil, what do you think of my cousin?" " I am enchanted by her! (answered Pacheco) you had reason to say she refembled you: I never faw features more alike: the fame turn of face, the same eyes, the same mouth, and tone of voice! There is, however, some difference between you. Aurora is a little taller than you: she is black, and you are fair. You are merry, and she is grave. These are what distinguish you the one from the other. As for understanding (added he) I do not believe a celef-

tial

tia

the 1

to

..

f

h

1

F

C

had

tial being can have more than your coufin. In a word, he is a lady of accomplished merit."

Signior Pacheco pronounced thefe last words with fo much vivacity, that Don Felix, faid, finiling. " Friend. I advise you for the sake of your repose, to go no more to Donna Kimena's. Aurora de Guzman may make your heart ake, and inspire you with a passion." "There is no occasion for another fight of her, to make me in love, (faid he, interrupting him) that is done already," " I am forry for it, (replied the presended Mendoza) for you are not one of those who can a tach themselves to one, and my coufin is no Itabella. I can affure you beforehand, that she will never litten to a lover, except on honourable terms." " Honourable terms! 1ep ied Don Lewis) fure no body would offer any other to a young lady of her birth. Alas! I should think myself the happielt of men, if the would approve of my addresses, and confent to join her destiny with mine!"

Since you talk in that thyle, (faid Don Felix) I am interested in your behalf. Yes, I list myself in your fervice - offer you all my influence with Aurora, and will to-morrow bring over my aunt, who has a great fway over her." Pacheco returned a thousand thanks to the cavalier who made him fuch fair promites; and we perceived with joy, that our ftratagein could not fucceed Next day, we increased the love of Don Lewis, by a new invention. My mistress having been with Donna Kimena on pretence to render her favourable to that cavalier, came back and faid to him, " I have fpoke to my aunt, whom with great difficulty, I have made your friend, the was furiously prejudiced against you: for fome body or other had made her believe that you was a downright libertine: but I undertook your defence with eagerness, and at last, destroyed the bad impression she had received of your morals."

"This is not all, (pursued Aurora) you must talk with my aunt, in my presence, and then we shall make sure of her assistance." Pacheco expressed extreme impatience to discourse with Donna Kimena, and that satisfaction was granted to him next morning, when the salse Mendoza conducted him to madam Ortiz, and they three had a long conversation, in which Don Lewis shewed that he

lix

far

fo

7

had allowed himself to be very much captivated, in a very little time. The artful Kimena seigned to be moved with all the tenderness he expressed, and promised her utmost endeavour to engage her niece to marry him. Pacheco immediately threw himself at the seet of such a kind aunt, and thanked her for her friendship: whereupon Don Felix asked if his cousin was up. " (No, answered the duenna) she is still a-bed, and you cannot see her at present, but return this asternoon, and you may converse with her at leisure." This answer of madam Kimena, redoubled (as you may well believe) the joy of Don Lewis, who thought the rest of the forenoon extremely tedious, and went back to his lodgings with Mendoza, who was not a little pleased with observing in him, all the marks of genuine love.

They talked of nothing but Aurora, and when they had dined, Don Felix faid to Pacheco, "There's a thought come into my head. I am of opinion, that I should go to my aunt's some minutes before you, and have a little chat with my cousin, that I may, if posfible, discover the disposition of her heart towards you." Don Lewis approving this scheme, let his stiend go before, and did not fet out till an hour after. So, my miftreis made fuch good use of her time, that she was dreffed like a lady, when her lover arrived. " I thought (faid the cavalier, after having faluted Aurora and the duenna) to have found Don Felix here." " You will fee him immediately, (answered Donna Kimena) he is writing in my closet." Upon which, Pacheco seemed to swallow the trick, and entered into convertation with the ladies. But notwithstanding the presence of the beloved object, he perceived that the hours sole away, without Mendoza's appearing; and as he could not help testifying some surprise at it, Aurora changing countenance all of a sudden, began to laugh, and said to Don Lewis, " Is it possible that you have no suspicion of the trick which has been played upon you? Do an artificial light-coloured tour, and painted eye-brows, make me fo unlike mytelf, that you have been mittaken by them hitherto? Undeceive yourfelf then, Pacheco, (continued the, resuming an air of gravity) and know that Don Felix de Mendoza and Aurora de Guzman, are one and the fame person."

She was not contented with extricating him out of this error, but also owned her pathon for him, and informed him of all the steps she had taken towards its success. Don Lewis, no less charmed than surprised with what he heard, threw himself at her feet, exclaiming in a transport of joy, " Ah, beautiful Aurora! may I then believe myself the happy mortal whom you have favoured fo much? How shall I recompense your goodness, which the most perfect love can never repay?" These words were accompanied with a thousand more passionate and tender expressions: after which, the two lovers conferred upon the measures that were to be taken towards the accomplishment of their mutual defires; and it was resolved that we should set out immediately for Madrid, and bring our comedy to a conclusion by marriage. This defign was no fooner formed than put in execution: in fifteen days, Don Lewis espoused my mistress, and their nuptials gave rise to entertainments and infinite rejoicings.

CHAP. VII. Gil Blas quits his place, and goes into the service of Don Gonzales de Pacheco.

THREE weeks after this marriage, my mistress being desirous of recompensing me for the service I had done her, made me a present of a hundred pistoles, saying, "Gil Blas, my friend, far from turning you away, I leave it to your choice to stay with me as long as you please; but my husband's uncle, Don Gonzales de Pacheco, wants to have you for a valet de chambre. I spoke to him so advantageously of you, that he assured me I would do him a savour in parting with you to him. He is an old nobleman, (added she) of an excellent character, and you will be quite happy in his service."

I thanked Aurora for her generofity, and as she had no longer any occasion for me, accepted the post to which I was recommended; the more willingly, as I should still be in the family. One morning, therefore, I went with a message from my new married mistres, to Signior Don Gonzales, who was still a-bed although it was near twelve o'clock. When I entered his chamber, I found him taking some broth which a page had brought in. The old gentleman's whiskers were in papers, his eyes almost quite extinguished, and his sace pale and meagre. He was one of those old boys who have been great rakes in their youth, and are not a whit more sedate in their old age. He received me with great civility, and told me that if I would serve him with as much zeal as I had manifested for his neice, I might depend upon living happily. I promised to have the same attachment to him which I had for her, and that moment, he engaged me in his fervice.

Behold me then with a new master, and heaven knows what fort of a man he was! When he got up, I fancied I saw the resurrection of Lazarus. Paint to your own imagination, a tall body so lean and withered, that when it was naked an anatomist might have taught ofteology upon it, with legs fo small that they looked like spindles, after he had put on three or four pair of flockings. This living mummy was besides troubled with an asthma, and coughed with every word he spoke. Having drank chocolate, he called for paper and ink, and wrote a letter which he fealed and fent away, according to the direction, by the page who had brought the broth; then turning to me, " Friend, (said he) thou art the perfon whom I intend henceforth to trust with my commissions, especially those which regard Donna Euphrasia, a young lady whom I love, and who is passionately fond of me."

"Good God! (said I to myself) how can young people help believing themselves beloved, when this old dotard thinks himself adored!" "Gil Blas, (added he) thou shalt go with me this very day to her house, where I sup almost every night, and thou wilt be charmed with her prudence and reserve; far from resembling those silly coquets who can relish nothing but youth, and are won by appearances only, she has an understanding already mature and judicious, that consults the sentiments of a man, and prefers a lover of delicacy and taste, to one of the most shining exteriors." Signior Don Gonzales did not here finish the elogium of his

milirels,

mift

fect

the

lool

am

bel

the

im

mo

ga

ier

wi

be le

0

th

fo

2

t

mistress, whom he represented as the epitome of all perfection. But he had a hearer not easily pertuaded. After the conduct of the actresses, which I had seen, I did not look upon old noblemen as people very happy in their amours. I pretended however, out of complaisance, to believe all that my master said. I did more, I extolled the discernment and taste of Euphrasia, and was even impudent enough to affirm, that she could not have a more amiable gallant.

The good old gentleman did not perceive that I made game of him; but on the contrary, applauded my good lense. So true it is, that a sycophant may run any risk with the great, who swallow all kind of flattery, let it be ever so absurd. The old man having written his letter, pulled some hairs out of his beard with a pair of pincers, cleaned his eyes of a thick gum that filled them, washed his ears and hands, and after having performed his ablutions, painted his whiskers, eyebrows, and hair, of a black colour; continuing longer at his toilet than an old widow who studies to hide the outrage of time upon her. Just as he had done dressing, another gentleman in years, one of his friends, entered, whose name was, the Count d'Asumar. But he, far from concealing his grey hairs, supported himself on a cane, and feemed to glory in his old age, rather than in appearing young. " Signior Pacheco. (faid he as he came in) I am come to dine with you." "You are very welcome, Count," (answered my master.) Mean while, having embraced one another, they fat down, and entered into conversation till such time as dinner was ready.

The discourse turned, at first, upon a bull-seast, which had been celebrated a sew days before; and as they had mentioned the cavaliers who had shewn the greatest vigour and address, the old Count like another Nestor, who from talking of the present, always took occasion to praise the past, said, with a sigh, "Alas! I see no men now a-days comparable to those I save known heretofore; and the tournaments are not performed with half the magnificence that they were, when I was a young man." I sughed within myself at the prejudice of honest Signior d Alumar, who did

hac

ing

Bla

fla

fin

fal

fo

th

ris

tr

CC

ar

fo

V

not confine it to tournaments only; but, I remember, when the dessert was set upon the table, seeing some fine peaches served up, he observed, "In my time the peaches were much larger than they are at present; nature degenerates every day." "At that rate (said Don Gonzales, smiling) the peaches of Adam's time must have been wonderfully large."

Count d'Afumar staid almost the whole day with my master, who no sooner found himself disengaged, than he went out, bidding me follow him. He went to Euphrasia's who lodged at the distance of an hundred paces from our house, and found her in a very handsome apartment. She was gaily dreffed, and had such a youthful air, that I concluded she was under age, although she was good thirty years old at least. She was really handsome, and her understanding soon raised my admiration: for the was not one of those coquets, who have nothing to recommend them but idle ribaldry and loose behaviour; she was modest in her manners, as well as in her conversation, and talked with a great deal of wit, without the least affectation. O heaven! said I to myself, is it possible that a lady of such delicacy can be a lady of pleasure! I imagined that impudence was inseparable from all women of her profession, and was aftonished to see one with the appearance of modesty; not reflecting that these princesses know how to assume any shape, and accommodate themselves to the characters of the people of fortune and nobility that fall into When their gallants are pleafed with fire and transport, they are brisk and petulant; and with those who love reserve, practise a prudent and virtuous behaviour: they are the true camelions, who change colour according to the humour and disposition of the men whom they approach.

Don Gonzales was none of those noblemen who are taken with your bold beauties: he could not bear ladies of that class; on the contrary, could relish no woman, unless she had the appearance of a vestal. Euphrasia, therefore, modelled herself accordingly, and shewed that all the good actresses are not employed in the theatre. Leaving my master with his nymph, I went down stairs into a hall, where I found an old chamber-maid, whom I had had known a waiting-woman to an actress. Recollecting me immediately, she said, "What! is it you, Gil Blas? you have quitted Arienia it seems, as I did Constantia." "Yes, truly, (answered I) it is a long time since I lest her, and went to serve a young lady of sashion. A player's life is not to my taste; and therefore, I dismissed myself, without deigning to come to the least explanation with Arsenia." "You was in the right, (replied the chambermaid, whose name was Beatrice) I served Constantia pretty much in the same manner: one morning early I gave in my accounts, very coldly, which she received without uttering one syllable, and to we parted cavalierly enough."

"I am extremely glad (faid I) that we now meet in a more honourable house: Donna Euphrasia seems to be a fort of woman of fashion, and I believe her character is very good." "You are not at all mistaken, (said the old waiting-woman) she is of a very good family; and as for her temper, I can affure you there never was one more equal and sweet. She is none of those passionate and difficult mistresses, who find fault with every thing, scold incessantly, torment their domestics, and, in one word, make a hell of their fervice. I never once heard her grumble; but when I happen to do any thing contrary to her inclination, the reproves me without rage. and never lets one of those epithets escape her, of which your violent dames are so liberal." " My master (1 refumed) is also very sweet tempered: he's the best natured mortal alive; and therefore you and I are much more happy than when we were in the service of actresses." " A thousand times more happy! (replied Beatrice) instead of leading a life of noise and tumult, I now live, as it were, in a retreat. No man enters these doors, but Signior Don Gonzales. I shall see no body but you in my folitude, for which I am not at all forry; for I have had an affection for you a long time, and more than once envied the happiness of Laura, in having you for a gallant. But, in short, I hope to be as happy as she; for, though I have neither her youth nor her beauty, by way of amends, I hate coquetry, and am as faithful as a turtle."

va

an

me

w ce

offer

ti

an

lu

20 21

th

21

to

d

n

t

T

1

As honest Beatrice was one of those persons who are obliged to make a tender of their favours, because no body will ask them, I was not at all tempted to profit by her advances: I did not desire, however, that she should perceive my contempt, and was even polite enough to express mytelf in tuch a manner, as that she did not lose all hopes of engaging my heart. I imagined then, that I had made a conquest of an old chambermaid, but happened, on this occasion, to be deceived: she did not behave in this manner to me, for my own fake only: her defign was to inspire me with love, that she might bring me over to the interest of her mistress, for whom fhe was so zealous, that she did not mind what it cost her, in promoting her advantage. I found my error next morning, when I carried a billet-coux from my master to Euphrasia. That lady gave me a most gracious reception, and faid a thousand obliging things, in which the was joined by her maid: one admiring my physiognomy, while the other observed in me an air of prudence and fagacity. According to them, Signior Don Gonzales possessed a treasure, in having such a valet. In a word, they praised me so much, that I suspected their applause, and even discerned the motives of it; but I received it in appearance, with all the fimplicity of a fool, and by this counterplot, effectually deceived the sharpers, who, at last, pulled off the mask.

" Hark'ee, Gil Blas, (said Euphrasia to me) it depends upon thyself to make thy fortune. Let us act in concert, my friend. Don Gonzales is old, and his conthitution so crazy, that the least touch of a fever affifted by an able physician, will carry him off. Let us make the best of the little time he has left, and exert ourselves fo, as that he may leave the best part of his estate to me. Thou shalt have a good share of the booty, and thou mayest depend upon my promise, as much as if I had made it before all the notaries of Madrid" " Madam, (answered I) you may command your humble servant. You have nothing to do, but to prescribe my conduct, and you shall be satisfied." " Very well, (she replied) thou must observe thy master, and give me an account of all his proceedings: when you talk to him in private, vate, don't fail to turn the conversation upon women. and from thence arifully take occasion to speak well of Ply him with Euphrafia as much as possible; and I again recommend it to you, to be very attentive to what passes in the family of the Pacheco's: if you perceive that any relation of Don Gonzales is extremely officious about him, and aims at the fuccession to his effate, acquaint me with it immediately; that is all I alk, and I warrant I shall fend him a-drift in a very little time; for I know the different characters of his relations. and the ridiculous lights in which they may be reprefented to him; having already prejudiced him pretty fuccessfully, against all his nephews and coufins."

By thele instructions, and others which Euphrasia added, I concluded that this lady was one of those who attached themselves to generous old men. She had lately prevailed upon Don Gonzales to fell an estate. the price of which the had converted to her own use; the exported from him valuable moveables every day. and, besides, had reason to hope that she would not be forgotten in his will. I pretended to engage willingly, to do all that she defired; and, diffimulation apart, doubted within myself, on my return home, whether I should contribute to impose upon my master, or undertake to detach him from his mistress. The last of these refolutions feemed more honourable than the other, and I felt mytelf more inclined to fulfil than betray my duty: besides, Euphrasia had made me no positive promise, and that, perhaps, was the occasion of my fidelity's remaining uncorrupted. I refolved, therefore, to ferve Don Gonzales with zeal, pertuading myfelf, that if I should be lucky enough to divert his affection from his idol, I should be better rewarded for this good action, than for all the bad ones I could commit.

That I might the more easily accomplish what I proposed, I shewed myself entired devoted to the service of Donna Euphrasia; I made her believe, that I spoke of her inceffantly to my mafter; and accordingly invented fables, which she took for sterling truth. I infinuated myfelf so much into her good graces, that she thought me entirely in her interest, and still the better to impole upon her, affected to appear in love with Beatrice,

unde

feiz but

into fait

Eu

wh

fau

for

on Tho

non

thy in?

bre

he

ten

Ih

pai

to ge

pre

th

fo

th

m

10 fle

ph

la

fe

th

01

m

who ravished to see, at her age, a young lover at her beck, did not much mind being deceived, provided she was deceived agreeably. When my master and I were each with his own princess, we composed two very different pictures in the same taste. Don Gonzales, pale and withred as I have represented him, when he attempted to ogle, looked like a wretch in his last agonies; and my infanta in proportion to the seeming increase of my passion, assumed still more and more childish airs, and practised all the artifice of an old coquet, which she had been learning forty years at least; having been refined in the service of some of those heroines of gallantry, who can please even in their old age, and die loaded with the spoils of two or three generations.

I was not satisfied with following my master, every evening, to the house of Euphrasia, I sometimes went thither, alone, by day; but at what hour soever I went in, I never met with any man, or woman either, of a suspicious appearance; nor could I discover the least trace of insidelity, a circumstance that surprized me not a little; for I could not imagine that such a handsome lady could be exactly true to Don Gonzales. And in this, surely, my judgment was not too rash; for the sair Euphrasia, (as you will presently see) that she might wait with the more patience for my master's estate, was provided with a lover more agreeable to a woman of her age.

One morning, when I carried as usual, a letter to the princess. I perceived, while I was in her chamber, the feet of a man concealed behind the tapestry. I went away without seeming to observe them; but although I ought not to be surprised at this object, which was no business of mine, I did not fail to resent it. Ah, perfidious wretch! said I to myself, in a passion, ah, wicked Eu. hrasia! thou art not satisfied with imposing upon a good old gentleman, by persuading him that he is beloved, but thou must also crown thy persidy, by abandoning thyself to another! What a sool was I, now I think on it, to moralize in this manner! I ought rather to have laughed at the adventure, and looked upon it as a compensation for the tiresome, languid moments she underwent, underwent, in her commerce with my master: I should, at least have done better in holding my tongue, than in feizing this occasion of acting the conscientious valet: but inflead of moderating my zeal, I entered we mly into the interest of Don Gonzales, to whom I made a faithful report of what I had feen; I even added, that Euphrasia wanted to seduce me; I concealed nothing of what she had said on that occasion, and it was his own fault if he was not perfectly acquainted with the character of his mistress. He was confounded at the information, and a small emotion of wrath that appeared on his countenance, feemd to prefage that the lady hould not be unfaithful to him with impunity. " Enough, Gil Blas, (said he) I am extremely fensible of thy attachment, and pleafed with thy fidelity; I will go in antly to Euphrasia, load her with reproaches, and break for ever with the ungrateful creature." So faying, he went out accordingly, and dispensed with my attendance, that he might spare me the disagreeable part

I had to play, during their eclaircissement.

I waited for my master's return with a world of impatience, not doubting, that as he had so much cause to complain of his nymph, he would come back altogether detached from her allurements. On this suppofition, I applauded myself for what I had done: I represented to myself the satisfaction which the natural heirs of Don Gonzales would have, when they learned that their kinfman was no longer the sport of a passion to contrary to their interests: I flattered myfelf, that they would consider me for it, and, in short, that I had diftinguished myself from other valets, who are usually more apt to encourage their masters in debauchery, than to reclaim them. I was in love with honour, and reflected, with pleasure, that I should pass for the Corypheus of all domestics. But this idea, agreeable as it was, vanished in a few hours; when my patron arriving, said, " Friend, I have had a very sharp conversation with Euphrasia, who assirms, that thou halt misreprefented her, and art, if she is to be believed, no other than an impostor, altogether devoted to my nephews. out of regard to whom, thou sparest nothing to make me quarrel with her. I saw real tears trickle from her VOL. II.

eyes, and she swore, by all that was facred, that she never made any proposal to thee, nor ever sees a man; Beatrice, who seems to be a good girl, protested the same thing, in such a manner, that my anger was appeased, in spite of my teeth."

" How, Sir, (faid I, interrupting him, in a forrowful manner) do you doubt my fincerity? do you distrust" - " No, child, (faid he, interrupting me in his turn) I do thee all manner of justice: I don't believe thee in a confederacy with my nephews. I am perfuaded that thou art concerned for my interest only, and I am obliged to thee: but appearances are decei ful. Perhaps what thou fawest, existed only in thy own imagination; and in that case, thou mayest guess how disagreeable thy accusation must be to Euphrasia. Be it as it may, the is a person whom I cannot help loving. ven make the facrifice to her which she demands, and that facrifice is thy difmission. I am forry for it, my poor Gil Blas, (added he) and I affure thee, I conferted to it with regret; but I could not do otherwise. What ought to contole thee is, that I shall not send thee away unrecompensed: and I intend, moreover, to fettle thee with a lady, a triend of mine, where thou wilt live very agreeably."

I was very much mortified to fee my zeal thus turned against myself: I cursed Euphrasia, and deplored the weakness of Don Genzales, who allowed himself to be led by the note. The good old man being very sensible, that in turning me away, merely to please his mistress, he did not behave in the most manly manner, made amends for his esseminacy, and gilded the pill I was to swallow, with a present of sisty ducats. Next day carrying me to the m retioness of Chaves, he told her, in my hearing, that I was a young man who possessed many good qualities; that he had a regard tor me, but samply reasons not permitting him to keep me in his service, he begged she would admit me into her samily. She received me that instant, into the number of her domestics; o that I found myself translated, all of a judden, into a new place.

CHAP.

C

wh

Wi

fav

28

of

fre

an

th

th

ar

th

0 je

b

d

f

0

1

CHAP. VIII. The character of the marchioness of Chaves, and of those people who usually visited ber.

THE marchione's of Chaves was a widow of five and thirty, handsome, tall, and well shaped, who enjoyed a yearly income of ten thousand ducats, without the care and incumbrance of children. I never saw a woman of more gravity, or one who spoke less, though this did not hinder her from being looked upon as the most witty lady in Madrid. The great concourse of people of quality, and men of learning, who daily frequented her house, contributed, perhaps, more than any thing she said, to give her this reputation. But this I will not undertake to decide: let it suffice to say, that her name imported the idea of a superior genius, and that her house was called, by way of excellence, the court of criticism.

There was actually, some performance or other read here every day, sometimes new plays, and sometimes other pieces of poetry; but nothing except serious subjects were deemed worthy of attention, humourous pieces being despited; the best comedy, or the most ingenious and witty romance was looked upon as a seeble production, that deserved no praise; whereas, the least serious work, such as an ode, ecloque, or sonnet, passed for the greatest effort of human understanding. But it often happened that the public did not confirm the sentence of the court; on the contrary, was sometimes so imposite as to his those pieces which had been there very much applicated.

I was chamberlain in this house; that is, my office consided in getting every thing ready in the apartment of my lady, for the reception of company, and to set the chairs for the men, and the cushions for the women, after which I stationed myself at the chamber-door, to amounce * and introduce the persons who arrived. While I was employed in this office for the first time, the governor of the pages, who, by accident, was then in the antichamber with me, described them all very pleasantly, as they came in. His name was Andrew Molina, naturally dry and fatirical, with a good share of understanding. A bishop being the first who presented himself, I announced him, and when he was entered. the governor observed, "That prelate is a man of a very pleasant character. Having a little credit at court. he would fain make every one believe that he has a great deal, and offers his interest to all the world, without ferving any body. One day, meeting at court, with a gentleman who faluted him, he stopt, loaded him with civilities, and squeezing his hand, said, " I am wholly devoted to your fervice; pray, Sir, put me to the proof: I shall never die satisfied until I have an opportunity of obliging you. The gentleman baving thanked him in a very grateful manner, they parted, and the prelate faid to one of his followers, " I think I know that man: I have a confused idea of having seen him somewhere."

^{*} The announcer is a domestic who stands in the hall, on visiting-days, and pronounces aloud the names of the company as they come in: from the latin word annu ciare.

Immediately after the bishop, the son of a grandee appeared; and when I had introduced him into my lady's chamber, " That nobleman (faid Molina) is another original. You must know that he goes often to a house, in order to treat of some important affair, with the gentleman who lives in it, and comes away without remembring to speak a syllable about the matter. But (added the governor, feeing two ladies advance) there comes Donna Angela de Pennafiel, and Donna Margarita de Montalvan, two ladies, between whom there is not the least resemblance: Donna Margarita, who piques herself on being a philosopher, will undertake the most profound doctors of Salamanca in a dispute, without fuffering their arguments to get the better of her argumentation. As for Donna Angela, she does not affect the virtuofi, although her understanding is perfectly well cultivated: her conversation is sensible, her sentiments refined, and her expression delicate, noble and natural." "This last is an amiable character, (said I to Molina) but the other, in my opinion, is inconfistent with the fair fex." " Not very confistent, (he replied, with a fneer) and even a great many men are rendered ridiculous by such a disposition. Madam the marchioness, our lady, (continued he) is also a little tainted with philosophy. What wrangling will there be here to-day! God grant that religion may not be concerned in the dispute!"

C

I

I

As he spoke these words, we perceived a meagre man come in, with an air of reserve and grim countenance. My governor did not spare him; "This here, (said he) is one of your serious wits who would fain pass for great geniuses, by the favour of a few sentences learned from Seneca, and who are easily detected to be fools, if you examine them a little closely." The next that came in, was a well-shaped cavalier, with a Grecian mien, that is, a very self-sufficient appearance: when I asked who he was, Molina answered, "He is a dramatic poet, who has composed, in his time, an hundred thousand verses, which never brought him in four pence: but in recompence for that, he has procured a considerable settlement, by fix lines of profe."

I was going to inform myfelf of the nature of a fortune got so easily, when I heard a great noise on the flair-case. "Good! (cried the governor) there comes the licentiate Campanario, who gives notice of his approach, before he appears, and beginning to talk at the ftreet door, continues without intermiffion until he goes away." Sure enough, the whole house rang again with the voice of the thundering licentiate, who at length, entered the antichamber with a batchelor of his acquaintance, and did not leave off speaking, all the time his visit lasted. " Signior Campanario (said I to Molina) feems to be a great genius." "Yes, (replied my governor) he has some bright sallies, quaint expressions, and a good deal of humour: but over and above his being an unconscionable talker, he does not fail to make repetitions; and not to over-rate his talents, I believe the agreeable and comic air with which he feasons every thing he fays, constitute his chief merit; for the greateft part of his strokes would do no great honour to a collection of witticisms."

Abundance of other people came in, of whom Molina made very humourous pictures, among which, he did not forget that of the marchioness. "I affure you (said he) our patroness is a lady of a very even temper, in spite of all her philosophy. She is not at all difficult to please, and one undergoes very sew caprices in her service. She is one of the most reasonable women of quality I know, and is even without passion; she has as little taste for gallantry as for play, and loves conversation only; in short, most ladies would think her way of life insupportably tiresome." The governor, by this elogium, prepossessed me in favour of my mistress; nevertheless, some days after, I could not help suspecting that she was not such an enemy to love: and I will declare on what foundation my suspicion was built.

One morning, while the was at her toilet, a little man presented himself to me, about forty years old, of a disagreeable figure, more dirty than the author Pedro de Noya, and very much hump-backed into the bar-When he told me he wanted to speak with the marchioness, I asked him, from whom? To which he answered, with a haughty look, " From myself; tell her, I am the gentleman of whom she spoke yesterday, to Donna Anna de Valasco." I introduced him into my lady's apartment, and fignified his arrival; upon which, the immediately exclaimed in a transport of joy; " Shew him in." She not only gave him a favourable reception, but likewise ordered all her women out of the room; fo that the little hunch-back, more happy than an honester man, remained alone with her; while the chambermaids and I made ourselves merry with this fine tête a tête that lasted near an hour; after which, my patroness dismissed the crook-back, loaded with civilities, that shewed how well she was satisfied with his converfation, which in effect, captivated her so much, that she told me one evening, in private, " Gil Blas, when the man with the hump returns, bring him into my apartment as fecretly as possible." I obeyed, and when the little man came back next morning, conducted him by a private stair-case, to my lady's chamber. I performed the same office most devoutly, two or three times, without suspecting that there could be any gallantry in the case. But the malignity which is so natural to mankind, foon inspired me with strange ideas, and

and I concluded that the inclination of the marchionefs, was either very whimfical, or that the hunch-back afted

the part of a go-between.

Prepossessed with this opinion, I often said to myself, "If my lady is in love with a handsome man, I forgive her, but if she is captivated by this baboon, truly, I cannot excute the depravity of her taste." How much was I mistaken in my patroness! The little hunch-back dabbled in magic, and as his skill had been extolled to the marchioness, who willingly listened to the delusions of such impostors, she honoured him with these private conversations, in which he shewed her things in a glass, taught her to turn the sieve, and for money, revealed all the mysteries of the cabala. Or rather, to speak truly, he was a sharper who subsisted at the expence of credulous people, and was said to have several women of quality under contribution.

CHAP. IX. The incident, in consequence of which, Gil Blas quitted the marchioness de Chaves; and the course he followed afterwards.

I H A D already lived fix months with the marchioness de Chaves, and I contess was satisfied with my condition; but the destiny I had to sulfil, would not permit me to live longer in that lady's house, nor even in Madrid: I will therefore recount the adventure that obliged me to remove from both.

Among my lady's maids, there was one called Portia, who befides her youth and beauty, possessed such an amiable character, that I attached myself to her, without knowing that I must dispute her heart with a rival.

The fecretary of the marchioness, who was a proud man, and very much addicted to jealousy, being captivated with my princess, no sooner perceived my passion, than (without endeavouring to find out my reception with Portia) he resolved to fight me in single combat, and for this purpose appointed me to meet him one morning, in a private place. As he was a little man, whose head scarce reached to my shoulders, and seemed at the same time very weak, I did not think him a very dangerous rival, but repaired with great considence to

ref

ho

dr

th

ap

no

h

al

d

2

1

h

y

the place appointed, in hopes of gaining an easy victory, and making a merit of it with Portia; but the event did not answer my expectation. The little secretary, who had been two or three years at the fencing-school, disarmed me like an infant, and holding the point of his fword to my throat, " Prepare (faid he) for the mortal blow, or elle give me thy word of honour, that thou wilt this day quit the service of the marchioness de Chaves, and never more think of Portia." I made him that promife, and kept it without reluctancy; being ashamed to appear before the rest of the servants, after my defeat, especially before the fair Helen who had been the cause of our duel. My sole intention in teturning to the house, was to carry off my goods and money, which having done, I fet out the same day for Toledo, my purse being pretty well furnished, and my back loaded with a bundle composed of my whole wearing apparel: for though I had not engaged to quit Madrid, I thought proper to leave it, at least for some years; and formed the resolution of making the tour of Spain, and of halting at every town. " The money I have (faid I to myself) will carry me a great way; for I don't intend to be extravagant, and when I have no more, I will betake myself again to service. A young man of my accomplishments will find places in abundance whenever he pleases to go in quest of them."

I longed, in particular, to fee Toledo, whither I arrived at the end of three days, and took up my lodging in a good inn, where I passed for a gentleman of confequence, by the favour of my intriguing drefs, which I did not fail to put on, and by the foppish airs which I affected. It was in my own option to establish a correspondence with some handsome women who lived in the neighbourhood; but understanding that I must begis by spending a good deal of money upon them, I bridled my defires, and feeling still a strong inclination for travelling, after having feen every thing that was curious in Toledo, I left it one morning by break of day, and took the road to Cuenca, with an intention to go to Arragon. On the second day of my journey, I went into an inn on the road, and just as I fat down to refresh refresh myself, a company of soldiers belonging to the holy brotherhood, came in, and calling for wine, fell a drinking. While they were over their cups, I heard them describe a young man whom they had orders to apprehend. "The gentleman (said one of them) is not more than twenty years of age, has long black hair, a good shape, an aqualine nose, and is mounted on a bay horse."

I listened without seeming to give attention to what they faid, and truly, I did not concern myfelf much about the matter. Leaving them in the inn, I fet forward on my journey, and had not walked a quarter of a league, when I met a young gentleman of a good mien. mounted on a chefnut coloured horse. "Upon my faith! (said I to myself) this is the man whom the soldiers are in fearch of: he has long black hair, and an aquiline nose. I must do him a good office. "Sir, (said I to him) give me leave to ask, whether or not you have some affair of honour on your hands?" The young gentleman, without making any reply, looked earnestly at me, and seemed surprised at my question. Upon which I affured him, that it was not out of curiofity that I had addressed him in this manner; and he was very well convinced of it, when I told him what I had overheard at the inn. "Generous stranger, sfaid he) I will not deny that I have reason to believe myself the person whom those soldiers want to apprehend; and therefore will take another road in order to avoid them." " It is my opinion (I replied) that we should immediately feek some place where you may be secure, and where we may be sheltered from that storm which I see brewing in the air, and which will burft very foon." At that instant we discovered and repaired to a tusted alley of trees that conducted us to the foot of a mountain where we found an hermitage.

It was a large deep grotto that time had scooped in the rock, to which the art of man had added a kind of front, built of pebbles and shell-work, and quite covered with turf: the adjacent field was strewed with a thousand forts of slowers which perfumed the air, and hard by the grotto, we perceived a little opening in the rock, from whence issued, with an agreeable noise, a spring of water that run winding along a meadow. At the entrance of this folitary habitation, appeared a holy hermit stooping under the weight of old age, supporting himself with a staff in one hand, and holding in the other a rosary of large beads, composed of twenty courses at least. His head was buried in a brown woollen cap with long ears, and his beard more white than fnow, came down to his middle. When we approached him, " Father, ('aid I) be so good as to favour us with shelter from the impending florin." " Enter, my children. (replied the anchorite, after having observed me attentively) this hermitage is at your service; and you may Ray here as long as you please. As for your horse, (added he, pointing to the forepart of his habitation) he will be very well accommodated in that place." The gentleman who accompanied me, disposed of his beast accordingly, and then we followed the old man into the grotto, which as foon as we had entered, a great shower tell, mingled with flashes of lightning, and dreadful claps of thunder. The hermit fell on his knees before an image of St. Pacomo *, which was glued to the wall, and we followed his example. Mean while, the thunder ceased, and we got up; but as the rain continued, and the day far spent, " My children (said the old man) I would not advise you to proceed on your journey in such weather, unless you have some pressing affair." The young man and I replied, that we had none that hindred us from halting, and that if we were not afraid of incommoding him, we would beg leave to pass the night in his hermitage. "You won't incommode me in the least, (faid the hermit) but will have reason to complain of your lodging; for you must lie hard, and I have nothing to offer you but anchorite's fare."

So faying, the holy man made us fit down at a small table, and presenting us with a few onions, a crust of ^{*} St. Pacomo, was an Ægyptian, who lived in the fourth century, and founded several monasteries, consisting of between twelve and sixteen hundred monks each: his faith is said to have been so effectual, that he walked among serpents unburt; and when he had occasion to cross the Nile, was transported from one fide to the other, on the back of a crocodile.

Bread

bread and pitcher of water, "My sons, (said he) you see my usual repast; but to-day I will commit an excess out of regard to you." He then brought a little cheese, with two handfuls of filberds, and spread them upon the table. The young man, who had no great appetite, did not much honour to the seast; upon which, the hermit observed to him, "I perceive that you are accustomed to better tables than mine, or rather sensuality has corrupted your natural taste. I have been in the world, as you are now: the most delicate viands, the most exquisite ragouts, were not too good for my palate: but since I have lived in solitude, I have received the former purity of my taste, and at present can relish nothing but roots, fruits, milk; in a word, that which composed the nourishment of our first parents."

While he spoke in this manner, the young man sunk into a profound reverie, which the hermit perceiving, "My son, (said he to him) you have an oppression on your spirits; may I not know the cause? unbosom yourself to me. It is not curiosity, but charity alone that animates my request. I am of age to give advice; and perhaps your situation requires it." "Yes, father, (replied the cavalier with a sigh) I have, doubtless, occasion for advice, and I will tollow your's since you are so good as to offer it. I believe, I run no risk in discovering myself to a man of your character." "No, my son, (said the senior) you have nothing to sear on that score, and may sately trust me with any secret." In this considence, the cavalier spoke as sollows.

CHAP. X. The flory of Don Alphonso and the fair Seraphina.

WILL conceal nothing from you, father, nor from the other gentleman who hears me; for after the generosity he shewed, I should be to blame to distrust him. Listen, therefore to my misfortunes. I was born in Madrid, and my origin is this.—An officer of the Guards, called the Baron Steinbach, going home one evening, perceiving a bundle of white linen at the foot of the stair case. He took it up and carried it to his wife's apartment, where he found it to be a new-born infant infant wrapped in very handsome swaddling cloaths; with a billet importing that it belonged to persons of quality who would one day make themselves known; and that it had been baptized by the name of Alphonso. I am that unhappy infant, and this is all I know of my birth and parentage: facrificed to honour or insidelity, I know not whether, my mother exposed me, in order to conceal a dishonourable stame; or seduced by a perjured lover, found herself under the cruel necessity of disown-

ing the fruit of her womb.

Be that as it will, the Baron and his lady were touched with my fituation, and as they had no children of their own, determined to educate me under the name of Don Alphonio. As I advanced in years, their attachment to me increased: my flattering and complaisant behaviour attracted their careffes every moment: in a word, I had the good fortune to make myself beloved; they gave me all kinds of masters; my education became their only study; and far from expecting impatiently, that my parents would discover themselves, they seemed on the contrary, to wish that my birth would always remain a fecret. As foon as the Baron found me able to carry arms, he entered me in the fervice, procured for me an enfign's commission, ordered my small equipage to be got ready; and, to animate me the more to feek occasions of acquiring glory, he represented to me, that the career of honour was open to every body, and that in war, I might obtain a name the more glorious, as I should owe it to myself alone. At the same time, he revealed the fecret of my birth, which he had hitherto concealed from my knowledge. As I passed for his son in Madrid, and effectually believed myself to be so; I own this piece of information gave me a good deal of pain: I could not then, nor cannot now think of it without shame; for the more my fentiments seemed to argue me of a noble origin, the greater my confusion was to see myfelf abandoned by those who gave me being.

I went to serve in the Low-Countries, but the peace being concluded soon after, and Spain rid of her enemies, though not of those who envied her prosperity, I returned to Madrid, where I received fresh marks of tenderness

tenderness from the Baron and his lady. About two months after my return, a little page came into my room one morning and presented to me a billet, conceived pretty nearly in these words; " I am neither ugly nor " ill-shaped, and yet you see me frequently at the win- dow without paying homage with your eyes. This be- haviour but ill answers your gallant appearance; and piques me so much that I wish I could inspire you " with love, to be revenged on your indifference."

Having read this billet, I did not doubt that it came from a widow called Leonora, who lived opposite to our house, and had the reputation of being very coquetish. I interrogated the page, who was on the reserve at first, but in consideration of a ducat which I slipt into his hand, he satisfied my curiosity; and even undertook to carry an answer by which I informed his mistress, that I acknowledged my crime, and was already sensible of her being more than half revenged.

I was not at all intentible of this kind of conquest; I kept the house all that day, and took great care to be always at the window, that I might observe the lady, who did not forget to shew herfelf at her's. I made love to her in dumb thew, the answered my fignals, and next morning, let me know by her page, that if I would be in the street betwixt eleven and twelve at night, I might converse with her at a parlour window. Though I did not find myself very much in love with such a forward widow, I did not fail to return a very passionate answer, and to wait for night with as much impatience as if I had been violently fmitten. In the evening, I went out, to walk in the Prado till the hour of affignation; and was no fooner arrived at that place, than a man mounted on a fine horse, alighted hard by me, and accosting me hastily said, " Are not you the son of Baron Steinbach ?" When I applied in the affirmative, "You are the person, (said he) who intend to converse with Leonora at her window. Her page has shewn me her letters, and your answers, and I have followed you this evening from your own house hither, to let you know that you have a rival whose pride is very much mortified in being obliged to dispute a heart with such a one as you. I believe I may fay no more; we are now in a private private place. Let us draw therefore, unless, to avoid the chastisement I prepare for you, you will promise to break off all correspondence with Leonora. You must either sacrifice to me the hopes you have conceived, or forteit your life immediately." "You ought then (said I to him) to have requested not demanded that sacrifice; I might, perhaps, have granted it to your intreaty, but

I refuse it to your threats."

"Tis very well, (he replied, after having tied his horse to a tree) draw then : it does not become a person of my quality to stoop so low as to intreat a man of your station: most people of my rank, in the same case, would have revenged themselves in a less honourable way." I was shocked with these last words, and seeing his sword already unsheathed, drew mine also: we attacked one another with fuch fury, that the combat did not last long: whether he behaved with too much heat or I had more skill, I know not, but I gave him a mortal thrust, upon which I faw him stagger and fall. Whereupon, minding my own fafety, I mounted his horse, and took the road to Toledo. I durst not return to the Baron's house, being well affured that my adventure would very much afflict him, and when I considered the danger in which I was, I thought I could not get out of Madrid too foon.

In the midst of the most melancholy reslections, I rode the remaining part of the night, and all the morning; but towards noon, was obliged to halt in order to give my horse some rest, and avoid the heat of the day which grew insupportable, I tarried therefore, in a village, till fun-fer, after which, I continued my journey, resolving to make but one stage to Toledo. I had got two leagues beyond Illescas, when, towards midnight, I was furprized in the middle of a field, with just fuch another florm as fell to day; upon which I drew near the wall of a garden that I perceived at the distance of a few paces, and not finding a more convenient shelter, stood with my horse as close as I could to the door of a summer-house figuated at the end of the wall, over which there was a balcony. As I leaned against the door, I perceived it open, which I ascribed to the negligence of servants; and alighting, less out of curiofity than for the fake of being better screened from the rain, which did not fail to incommode me while I remained under the balcony. I ente ed the ground-floor of the summerhouse with my horse, which I led by the bridle.

I employed myself during the tempest, in observing the place, and though I could diffinguish nothing but by the lightning that flashed around, it was easy to perceive that the house did not belong to a vulgar owner. I expected still that the rain would cease, intending to proceed on my journey; but a great light that I observed at a distance, made me change my resolution. Leaving my horse in the summer-house, the door of which I took care to fecure, I advanced towards the light, perfuaded that there was still iomebody in the house, not yet gone to bed, and ref lved to defire lodging for that night. Having croffed feveral walks, I arrived at a faloon, the door of which I found open also; I entered it, and when I had observed all the magnificence of the place, by the light of a fine crystal branch. I no longer doubted that I was in the house of some rich nobleman. The pavement was of marble, the wainfcot very handsome, and curioully gilt, the cornifies of admirable workmanship, and the ceiling painted by the most skilful masters: but what I tock particular notice of, was an infinite number of bufts of Spanish heroes, supported on pedestals of jasper, all round the saloon. I had leisure enough to confider all these things, for though I littened at entively from time to time, I neither heard the least noite, nor faw a living creature appear.

There being on one fide of the saloon a door unbolted, I half opened it, and perceived a range of rooms, the last of which was only lighted—" What shall I do? (said I to mytelf) shall I return, or boldly penerrate to that room? I concluded that the most judicious step would be to return as I came. But L could not resist my curiosity, or rather the force of destiny that dragged me along: I advanced from one room to another, until I arrived at that in which was the light, that is, a taper burning on a marble table, in a silver candiestick gilt. I at first observed very handsome and gay summer surniture, but in a little time, casting my eyes upon a bed, the curtains of which were half drawn on account of the heat, I saw an object that attracted my whole attention.

tention. This was a young lady, who notwithstanding the noise of the thunder, lay in a profound sleep. I approached her softly, and by the light of the taper, discovered a complexion and features that quite dazzled me. My heart took the alarm at the sight! I felt my soul smitten and transported: but whatever emotions agitated my breast, the opinion which I had of her high rank, hindered me from entertaining the least rath thought, and respect prevailed over inclination.

While I glutted myself with the pleasure of contemplating her beauty, she awoke; and you may guess what was her surprise when she saw a man whom she did not know in her bedchamber at midnight. She trembled when the perceived me, and thricked aloud; while I endeavoured to remove her fear, by kneeling before her, and faying, " Madam, be not afraid: I come not hither to do you the least injury." I was going on, but her conflernation was such that she did not hear me. She called her women several times, but no body answering, fhe put on a thin night gown which lay at the b-d's feet. got up hastily, and went into the rooms that I had crossed, still calling her maids and a younger fifter who lived under her care. I expected to see all her servants appear, and had reason to apprehend that without being heard. I should meet with very disagreeable treatment; but luckily for me, the called to no purpose; no body came but an old domestic, who could not have given her much affistance, had she had any thing to fear. Nevertheless, growing more resolute by his presence, she asked with a haughty air, who I was, and how and for what reason I had the boldness to enter her house. I then began to justify myself, and had no sooner told her that I had found the door of the summer-house open, than she exclaimed, " Just heaven! what do I presage!"

So faying, the feized the light, and fearching all the rooms, one after another, could fee neither her maids, nor her fifter, but even observed that they had carried off all their baggage. Her suspicions appearing now but too plain, she returned to me, and said, with a great deal of emotion, "Perfidious wretch! add not dissimulation to treachery. It was not chance that brought thee here. Thou art one of the followers of Don Fernando Leyva, and an affociate in his crime : but don't think to escape. I have still people enough to secure thee."

"Madam (answered I) do not consound me with your I know no such person as Don Fernando de Leyva, and am even ignorant of your name and quality. I am an unfortunate man whom an affair of h nour hath obliged to leave Madrid; and I twear by all that is facred, I would not have entered your house had it not been for the storm that surprised me! Judge, therefore, more favourably of me, and instead of believing me an accomplice in the outrage you have fuffered, think me rather disposed to revenge it." These last words, and the tone with which they were pronounced, appealed the lady, who feemed to look upon me no longer as an enemy: but if her indignation vanished, it was only to make room for her grief. She wept bitterly; I was melted by her tears, and no less afflicted than she, although I did not know the cause of her forrow. I not only wept with her, but impatient to revenge her wrongs, was feized with a transport of fury. " Madam, (cried I) what injury have you received? Speak, I espouse your resentment. Shall I pursue Don Fernando, and flab him to the heart? Name all those whom you would have facrificed. Command my fervice. dangers, whatever misfortunes may be attached to your vengeance, that stranger whom you thought confederate with your enemies, will tempt them all, for your fake "

This transport surprized the lady, and stopt the course of her tears: "Ah! Sir! (said she) pardon my suspicion, on account of the cruel situation in which I am. These generous sentiments have undeceived Seraphina, and even freed me from the shame of seeing a stranger witness to the affront put upon my family. Yes, generous unknown! I acknowledge my error, and am far from rejecting your assistance; but I ask not the death of Don Fernando."—"Well, madam, (I replied) what services can you expect of me?" "Sir, (answered Seraphina) the cause of my complaint is this: Don Fernando de Leyva is in love with my sister Julia, whom he saw by accident at Toledo, where we usually live—Three months ago, he asked her in marriage of the Count de Leyvo Polan, my father, who refused his confent, on account of an old enmi y subsisting between our families.—My sister, not yet sisteen years of age, must have been weak enough to so low the advice of my women, whom Don Fernando has, doubtless, bribed to his interest; and he, informed of our being by ourselves in this country-house, has taken this opportunity of carrying her off.—I want therefore to know what retreat he has chose for her, that my father and brother, who have been at Madrid these two months, may take their measures accordingly. In the name of God! (added she) give yourself the trouble of traversing the neighbourhood of Toledo, and of making an exact enquiry about the ravisher:—my family will be eternally indebted to you for the favour."

The lady did not confider, that the employment which she prescribed for me, but ill agreed with the circumflances of a man who could not get out of Castile too foon. But how was it possible for her to make this reflection, which did not even occur to me? Charmed with the happiness of finding myself necessary to the most amiable person in the world, I accepted the commission with a transport of joy, and promised to acquit myself with equal diligence and zeal. In effect, I did not wait for day, in order to go and accomplish my promife; but quitted Scraphina on the instant, conjuring her to pardon me for the fright I had occasioned, and affuring her that the thould hear news of me in a very little time. -- I went our as I came in ; but to much ingroffed by the lady, that it was not difficult for me to perceive that I was already captivated with her beauty: I was the more confirmed in this, by the eagerness I felt in ferving her, and the amorous chimeras which my imagination produced .--- I fancied that Seraphina, although possessed by her forrow, had observed my growing passion, and beheld it perhaps not without some pleasure: I imagined, that if I could bring her any news of her filter, and the affair should turn out according to her wish, the whole would redound to my honour.

Don Alphonso interrupting the thread of his story in this place, said to the old hermit, "I beg pardon, sather, if, too sull of my passion, I enlarge upon circum-

Stances

flances which are, doubtless, tedious to you." No, my son, (replied the anchorite) they are far from being tedious: I am even pleased to know how far you are smitten by this young lady of whom you talk, that I may regulate my advice accordingly."

" My imagination heated with these flattering ideas, (refumed the young man) I fearched two days for Julia's ravisher: but it was to no purpose for me to make all imaginable inquiry; I could not discover the least traces of him. Very much mortified at having reaped no fruit from my researches, I returned to Seraphina, whom I expected to find in the utmost anxiety: but she was much more tranquil than I imagined, and informed me that she had been much more lucky than I; that she knew what was become of her fifter, having received a letter from Don Fernando himfelf, importing, that being privately married to Julia, he had placed her in a convent at Toledo. " I have fent his letter to my father, (added Seraphina) I hope the affair will terminate in an amicable manner, and that a solemn marriage will in a short time extinguish the hatred which has to long divided our families."

When the lady had made me acquainted with her fifter's fate, the made an apology for the trouble the had given me, and the danger to which the might have imprudently expoted me, by engaging me to purfue a ravisher, without remembering that I had told her I was obliged to fly, on account of an affair of honour:----the excused hertelf therefore in the most obliging terms, and, as I had need of rest, carried me into the saloon, where we sat down together -- She wore a loose gown of white tastety with black stripes, and a little hat of the same stuff, with a black plume of feathers, which made me guess that she was a widow; though she appeared so young, that I did not know what to think of her condition.

If I longed for an explanation on this head, she was no less desirous of knowing who I was; accordingly, begged that I would tell her my name, not doubting (as she said) that by my noble air, and still more the generous pity that made me enter so warmly into her interests, I belonged to some considerable family.--- The question embarrassed me not a little: I blushed, was contounded, and own, that being less ashamed, to lie than to tell the truth, I answered, I was the son of the Baron de Steinbach, an officer of the German guards. " Tell me likewise (replied the lady) for what reason you quitted Madrid: I offer you, beforehand, all the credit of my father, as well as of my brother Don Gaspard: that is the least mark of gratitude I can shew to a gentleman, who neglected the care of his own life to ferve me." I made no difficulty of recounting to her all the circumstances of my duel; upon which she blamed the gentleman whom I had flain, and promised to interest her whole family in my favour.

When I had fatisfied her curiofity, I begged her to gratify mine, and asked her whether her faith was free or plighted. " Three years ago (she replied) my father ob'iged me to marry Don Diego de Lara, and I have been a widow fifteen months."-- " Madam, (laid I) what misfortune has deprived you of your husband so foon?" I will tell you, Sir, (refumed the lady) in return for the confidence you have reposed in me."

" Don Diego de Lara, was a very genteel cavalier; but tho' he entertained the most violent passion for me, and, in order to please me, put in practice (every day) all that the most tender and passionate lover could invent, to make himself agreeable to the object of his flame; though he poffessed a thousand good qualities, he could never touch my heart. Love is not always the effect of affiduities and diftinguished merit. --- Alas! (added she) an utter stranger often enchants us at first fight. Well, it was not in my power to love him: more confounded than charmed with the tokens of his tendernets, to which I was forced to make returns without inclination; tho' I, in fecret, taxed myself with ingratitude, I likewise found my own fituation very unhappy .--- Unluckily for him, as well as me, his delicacy was still greater than his love. He discovered in my actions and discourse the most secret emotions of my breast, and dived to the very bottom of my foul. He complained inceffantly of my indifference, and deemed himself the more unhappy in being unable to please me, because he very well knew that there was no rival in his way; for I was scarce fixteen years old, and before he offered me his hand, he had gained

gain

mar

fav

ind

wo

ma

tot

he

int

del

Ar

th

D

w

fo

CO

tr

w

fi

di

0 tl

it

P

V

h

gained over all my women, who affured him that no man had as yet attracted my regard .-- " Yes, Seraphina, (he would often fay) I wish you had been prepossessed in favour of another, and that alone were the cause of your indifference to me: my affiduities and your own virtue would triumph over that prejudice; but I despair of making a conquest over your heart, fince it remains untouched by all the love I have shewn." Tired with hearing him repeat the same discourse, I told him, that. instead of troubling his repose and mine with too much delicacy, he would do well to leave his grievances to time. And truly, one of my age was not capable of relishing the refinements of such a delicate passion; so that Don Diego ought to have taken my advice: but feeing a whole year relapfed, without his being farther advanced than the first day, he lost his patience, or rather his reafon; and pretending to have an affair of consequence at court, departed to serve as a volunteer in the Low Countries, where he foon found in a battle that which he went to feek : I mean the end of his torments and life."

After the lady had favour'd me with this relation, the fingular character of her husband became the subject of our discourse; in which we were interrupted by the arrival of a courier, who delivered to Seraphina a letter from the Count de Polan .- She asked my permission to read it, and I observed, that while she perused it, she grew pale, and trembled. After having read it, the lifted up her eyes to heaven, heaved a profound figh, and her face was in a moment covered with tears. I could not behold her grief with tranquillity; I was greatly diffurbed; and, as if I had prefaged the cruel stroke I was to suffer, felt myfelf chilled with a mortal fear, "Madam, (faid I, with a faultering voice) may I alk what are the fatal contents of that letter?" . There, Sir, (replied Seraphina, in a melancholy manner, giving me the paper) read yourfelf what my father writes. Alas! you are but too much concerned."

I was contounded at her words, and, trembling while

I took the letter, read:

[&]quot;YOUR brother Don Gaspard fought yesterday in the Prado , where he received a mortal thrust, ^{} Prado, (which fignifies a meadow) is the publick walk at Madrid, as the park is at London.

of which he died this day; having declared in his last moments, that the person who killed him is the son of Bason de Steinbach, an officer of the German guards.

What adds to the missortune is, that the murderer has escaped me by slight: but wheresoever he conceals himself, I shall spare no pains to find him out; for which purpose I will write to some governors who will not fail to apprehend him, if he passes thro' the towns of their jurisdiction: and by letters directed to other people, I will cause all the roads to be blocked up.

The Count de Polan."

You may easily conceive how all my faculties were disordered by this billet. I remained for some moments without motion or power of fpeech; and even in the midth of this depression, perceiving what a fatal obstruction the death of Don Gaspard would be to my love, was feized with the most violent despair! I threw myfelf at the feet of Seraphina, and prefenting my naked fword, " Madam, (faid I) spare the Count de Polan the trouble of finding out a man, who might conceal himself from his resentment. Revenge your brother, by facrificing his murderer with your own hand. --- Strike, Madam, and let the same sword that deprived him of life, become fa al to his unfortunate adverfary." " Sir, (replied Seraph na. affected with my behaviour) I loved Don Gaspard; therefore, altho' you killed him honourably, and he brought his misfortune upon himfelf, you may be affured I enter into the resentment of my father. Yes, Don Alphonfo, I am your enemy, and will act against you every thing that the ties of blood and friendfhip can require: but I will not take the advantage of your bad fortune, which has put you in my power. -The same honour that arms me against you, hinders me from taking a base revenge. The rights of hospitality ought to be involable, and therefore I will not repay the fervice you have done me, with the conduct of an affastin - Fly, then; elude, if you can, our purfuit and the rigour of the laws, and tave your life from the danger that threatens it."

"How, Madam! (I replied) when you can revenge yourfelf, do you leave it to the laws, which may perhaps haps baulk your resentment? Ah! rather pierce the heart of a miserable wretch, who does not deterve your forbearance! No, Madam, do not honour me with fuch a noble and generous proceeding - You know not who I am: though I pass in Madrid for the son of the Baron de Steinbach, I am no other than an unfortunate foundling, whom he has brought up, out of pure compassion: I do not even know the authors of my being." " No matter, (said Seraphina, interrupting me with precipitation, as if my last words had given her new pain) were you the lowest of mankind, I will do what honour prescribes." " Well, Madam, (said 1) since the death of a brother cannot provoke you to shed my blood, I will incense you by a new crime; the audacity of which, I hope, you will not excuse. - I adore you - I could not behold your charms without being dazz'ed with them; and, in spite of the obscurity of my fare, had. entertained the hope of making you mine for ever. was fo much in love, or rather fo vain, as to flatter myfelf that heaven (which perhaps favours me by keeping my origin concealed) would disclose it to me one day, when I should be able to tell you my name, without a blush. - After this confession which injures you so much, do you still hesitate in punishing me?" " This rash declaration (replied the lady) would, doubtless, offend me at another time; but I pardon it, in consideration of vour present agitation: besides my own anxiety will not permit me to attend to fuch discourse. more, Don Alphonso, (added she, shedding some tears) leave this place - fly from a house you have filled with forrow; for every moment you flay, increases my affliction." " Madam, I will no longer resist, (said I, riling) I must banish myself from you; but think not, that itudious of preferving a life which is odious to you, I will go and feek an afylum where I can be fecure. -No, no! I devote myself to your relentment. will go to Toledo, wait with impatience for the fate you decree, and, exposing myself to your pursuit, advance willingly towards the end of my misfortunes."

n

ıl

7

, of ۲,

d -1

u

۲.

B

1-

of

ne

ty

ay an 11-

III

ge

eraps So faying, I withdrew: my horse was brought out for me, and I repaired to Toledo *, where I staid a whole week; and, truly, was at so little pains to conceal myfelf, that I don't know how I escaped being taken; for I cannot believe that the Count de Polan, whose chief care was to shut up all the passages against me, would imagine that I could not pass thro' Toledo.—In fine, I yesterday est that city, where I seemed to be tired of liberty; and without keeping any certain road, am come to this hermitage, like a man who has nothing to fear.

You see, father, what engrosses my thoughts, and I crave the assistance of your advice.

CHAP. XI. The old hermit discovers himself, and Gil Blas perceives that he is among his acquaintance.

A LPHONSO having ended the melancholy narration of his misfortunes, the old hermit said to him, Son, you have been very imprulent in staying so long at Toledo. I look upon all you have recounted, in a light very different from that in which you see it, and your passion for Seraphina, is in my opinion, pure madness. Believe me. you must forget that young lady, who cannot possibly be yours.—Yield therefore, with a good grace, to the obstacles that separate you from her, and follow your destiny, which, in all likelihood, will be productive of many other adventures.—You will, questionless, find some other young lady, who will make the same impression upon your heart, and whole brother you have not slain."

He was going to add a great many other things, in order to exhort Don Alphonfo to have patience, when we faw another hermit, loaded with a wallet well stuffed, enter the hermitage. He was come from the town of Cuença, where he had made a very successful gathering; seemed younger than his companion, and wore a red bushy beard.

^{*} Toledo, fituated on the Tagus, is the capital of new Castile, the seat of an archbishop, primate of all Spain: it was formerly samous for a circus, capable of containing 150,000 people. There is a great manufacture of silk and woollen stuffs in this city; in which too, are made the best blades in the world; whence a good sword is called, a Toledo.

beard. " Welcome, brother Antonio, (faid the old Anchorite, to him) what news from town?" " Bad enough, (answered the red-haired brother, putting a letter in his hand) that billet will inform you" The fenior, having opened and read it with suitable attention. cried, " God be praised! since the plot is discovered, we must regulate our conduct accordingly. Let us change our style, (added he.) Signior Don Alphonso, you fee a man exposed, like yourself, to the caprice of fortune. I am informed from Cuença, which is a town about a league from this, that somebody has done me an ill office with justice; all the agents of which are to fet out to morrow for this hermitage, in order to fecure my person; but they shan't find the hare in the gin -- This is not the first time that I have been in such dilemmas .--- Thank God, I have almost always extricated myfelf in another shape; for such as you see me, I am neither an old man nor a hermit."

So faying, he first himself of a long robe which he wore, and appeared in a doublet of black ferge with flashed sleeves .-- Then he pulled off his cap, untied a ftring that supported his false beard, and all of a sudden. assumed the figure of a man between twenty and thirty years of age. Brother Antony, by his example, quitted his hermit's habit, rid himself of his red beard in the fame manner as his companion had done, and took out of an old worm-eaten coffer a shabby short cassock, with which he clothed himself.—But you may guess my furprise, when in the person of the old Anchorite. I recollected Signior Don Raphael; and in that of brother Antony, my most dear and faithful valet, Ambrose de Lamela! Good God! (cried!, immediately) I find I am among my acquaintance here."-" True, Signior Gil Blas. (said Raphael, smiling) you have found two of your friends when you least expected it. I confess you have some reason to complain of us; but let us forget what is past, and thank heaven for our meeting again. Ambrose and I make a tendre of our services; and I can tell you, they are not to be despised. You must not think us the worst of mankind: we neither affault nor affailinate: we feek only to live at the expence of our neighbour; and if thef; be a crime, Vol. II.

y

3

rd.

necessity excuses the injustice. Affociate with us, and lead a rambling life which is extremely agreeable, when conducted with prudence; not but, with all our sagacity, the chain of second causes is sometimes such, that we meet with unlucky adventures. What then! we enjoy the good with the better relish on that very account.——We are hardened against inconstant weather, and accustomed to the vicissitudes of sortune."

" Signior Cavalier, (added the falle hermit, speaking to Don Alphonso) we make the same proposal to you. which confidering your present fituation, I think you ought not to reject; for, not to mention the affair that obliges you to conceal yourfelf, you must certainly be in want of money." "Yes, truly, (faid Don Alphonfo) and that, I own, increases my chagrin."-Well, then, (replied Raphael) don't leave us : you cannot do better than to join your fortune to ours : you shall want nothing; and we will baffle all the search of vour enemies. We know almost every inch of Spain, having travelled over it; and are acquainted with the woods, mountains, and every place proper for an alylum against the brutality of justice." Don Alphonso thanked them for their good will, and being actually without money or refource, refolved to bear them company. I came to the fame determination, because I would not leave the young gentleman, for whom I felt a growing friendship.

Having agreed to go all together, we began to deliberate whether we should set out that instant, or, first of all, give some assaults to a bottle sull of excellent wine, which brother Antony, the day before, had brought from Cuença: but Raphael, as a man of the greatest experience among us, represented that, before every thing else, we must think of our safety. He was of opinion, therefore, that we should march all night, in order to gain a very thick wood between Villardesa and Almodabar, in which we should halt, and, being very secure, spend the day in taking our repose. This advice being approved, the salse hermits made two bundles of their baggage and provisions, and laid them in equilibrio on Don Alphonso's horse. This was done with great expedition; after which we quitted the hermitage,

tage, leaving as a prey to justice, the two hermit-robes, with the white and red beards, two pallats, a table, a rotten chest, two old straw-bottomed chairs, and the image of St. Pacomo.

We walked all night, and began to feel ourfelves very much fatigued, when, at day-break, we perceived the wood to which we were bound. The fight of a port gives new vigour to failors tired with a long voyage.-We accordingly took courage, and at last arrived at the end of our journey before fun-rife. Penetrating into the thickest part of the wood, we stopt at a very agreeable spot upon a small glade, surrounded with a good many tall oaks; the branches of which meeting, formed an umbrageous arch, impervious to the heat of the day. Here we unbridled the horle to let him feed, (after we had unloaded him) and fitting down together. took out of brother Antony's wallet some large pieces of bread, with a good many flices of roafted meat, and began to attack them as if for a wager. Nevertheless, in spite of our appetites, we often left off eating to embrace the bottle, which inceffantly circulated, passing from the clasp of one into the embraces of another.

Towards the end of the repast, Don Raphael said to Don Alphonfo, "Signior Cavalier, after the confidence you have honoured me with, it is but just, that I recount to you the history of my life, with the same fincerity." " It will give me great pleasure," (replied the young man: " And me in particular (cried I;) for I have an extreme curiofity to hear your adventures, which are doubtless well worth out attention." " That I'll answer for, (replied Raphael) and I intend to commit them to writing one day. - It shall be the amusement of my old age; for I am still young, and would have the volume enlarged: but at prefent we are fatigued. Let us refresh ourselves with a sew hours of fleep: while we three enjoy our rest, Ambrose will watch against all surprize, and then sleep in his turn. Tho' I believe we are very fafe in this place, it is always good to be upon our guard." So faying, he stretched himself upon the grass, Don Alphonso did the same, I followed their example, and Lamela stood fentry.

P 2

Don Alphonso, instead of taking some repose, kept himself awake with reflecting upon his missfortunes; and I could not close an eye. As for Don Raphael, he soon sell asleep; but awaking an hour after, and seeing us disposed to listen, he said to Lamela, "Friend Ambrose, thou may'st now take a comfortable nap." "No, no, (replied Lamela) I have no inclination to sleep; and tho' I am well acquainted with all the passages of your life, they are to instructive for people of our profession, that I shall be very well entertained in hearing them recounted once more." Don Raphael immediately began the history of his life in these terms.

BOOK V.

CHAP. I. The history of Don Raphael.

Am the son of an actress at Madrid, whose name was Lucinda, famous for her theatrical talents, and still more for her gallantry. As for my father, I cannot, without presumption, assume any one in particular. 'Tis true, I might tell what man of quality was in love with my mother when I came into the world; but that epocha would by no means be a convincing proof of his being the author of my birth. A woman of my mother's prosession is so little to be trusted, that even while she appears the most attached to one nobleman, she almost always substitutes in his place some other person for his money.

There's nothing like putting one's self above scandal: Lucinda, instead of bringing me up in obscurity at her own house, took me by the hand, without ceremony, and carried me to the theatre in a very honourable manner, without giving herself any trouble about the discourse that pais'd at her expence, or the malicious sneers that the fight of me never failed to excite.—In a word,

1 wa

I was her darling, and cares'd by all the men that vifited her, so much, that it looked as if nature pleaded with them in my behalf.

I was allowed to pass the twelve first years of my life in all forts of frivolous amusements: ----- scarce was I taught to read and write; and still less pains were taken to initiate me in the principles of my religion: I learned only to dance, fing, and play upon the guitarre. -This was all I could do, when the marquis de Leganez alked me as a companion to his only fon, who was pretty much of my age. Lucinda willingly-complied with his request, and it was then I began to think feriously. Young Leganez was not farther advanced than I: that little nobleman did not feem qualified by nature for the sciences. He hardly knew one letter of his alphabet, although he had been under the instruction of a preceptor fifteen months .- His other matters succeeded no better: he exhausted their patience. They were not, indeed, permitted to use rigour; but expressly ordered to instruct, without tormenting him; and that order, joined to his natural dullness, rendered all their lessons of little or no effect.

But the preceptor invented an excellent expedient to intimidate the young nobleman, without contradicting his father's order. He resolved to flog me, when his pupil deferved punishment; and he did not fail to put his resolution in practice. Not relishing this expedient, I ran away, and complained to my mother of fuch unjust treatment : but, in spite of all her tenderness for me, she had strength enough to resist my tears, and confidering that it was a great advantage for her fon to live with the marquis de Leganez, fent me back immediately. I was now abandoned to the preceptor, who perceiving that his invention had produced a good effect, continued to flog me still, instead of the young nobleman; and, in order to make the deeper impression upon him, disciplined me with great severity. I was sure to pay, every day, for young Leganez, and I may venture to affirm, that he did not learn one letter of his alphabet, which did not cost me an hundred lashes. Judge you what his rudiments flood me in.

P 3

The

The birch was not the only disagreeable thing I suffered in this house; as every body knew me, the meanest servant, even the scullion, reproached me with my birth. This disgusted me so much, that I ran away one day, after having sounds means to seize the preceptor's whole stock of ready money, which might amount to an hundred and sifty ducats. Such was the vengeance I took, for the stripes he had so unjustly bestowed upon me. I performed this slight of hand with admirable dexterity, though it was my first essay; and having had the address to bassle the search that was made for me during two days, left Madrid, and repaired to Toledo, without being pursued.

I was then just going into my fifteenth year. What a pleasure it was to be independent, at that age, and entirely master of my own actions! I soon contracted acquaintance with young people, who polished me up, and affifted me to fpend my ducats: I affociated with knights of the posts, who cultivated my happy disposition fo well, that, in a little time, I became one of the most dexterous of the order. At the end of five years, being feized with an inclination to travel, I quitted my confederates, and beginning my peregrinations by Eftremadura, went as far as Alcantara: but before I reached that place, finding an opportunity of exerting my talents, I did not let it escape. Being a-foot, and moreover loaded with a pretty heavy knapfack, I frequently halted to repose myself under the trees, that offered me their shade, at a little distance from the highway. In one of these resting-places, I found two lads very well dreffed, talking merrily on the grass, while they enjoyed the coolness of the shade. I saluted them very courteoully, and entered into conversation with them, at which they did not feem displeased. The eldest was not more than fifteen, and they feemed both to be extremely raw. " Signior cavalier, (faid the youngest to me) we are sons of two rich citizens of Placentia, who longing extremely to see the kingdom of Portugal, in order to fatisfy our curiofity, have taken an hundred pistoles each from our parents; and as we travel a-foot, hope to go a great way with that fum. What is your opinion of the matter?" " If I had fo much, (I replied) God God knows where I should go; I would visit the four corners of the world. What the devil! two hundred pistoles! 'tis an immense sum, and you'll never see the end of it. If it be agreeable to you, gentlemen, (added 1) I shall have the honour of accompanying you, as far as the city of Almeria, where I am going to take possession of the estate of an uncle, who has been settled in that place twenty years, or thereabouts."

The young citizens affured me, they would be glad of my company. Whereupon, having rested ourselves a little, we fet forwards all together, towards Alcantara, where we arrived a good while before night, and went to lodge at a good inn. We asked for a room, and were fhewn into one, where there was a press with a key in it. Having bespoke supper. I proposed to my comrades, that we should go and see the town, while it was getting ready. They accepted the proposal, we locked our knapfacks in the prefs, the key of which one of the citizens put in his pocket, and going out of the inn, went to view the churches. While we were in the cathedral, I pretended, all of a sudden, to have an affair of consequence in hand, and said to my companions. " Gentlemen, I have just recollected that a person of Toledo defired me to deliver a short message to a merchant, who lives near this church. Pray wait for me here, and I'll be back in an instant." So faving, I left them, run to the inn, flew to the cheft, forced the lock, and rummaging the knapfacks of my young cits, found their pistoles. Poor children! I did not leave them fo much as one to pay for their night's lodging. I carried all off, quitted the town as fast as possible, and took the road to Merida, without giving myself any farther concern about them.

That adventure put me in a condition to travel agreeably: though I was young. I found myfelf capable of conducting myfelf with prudence; and I may fay, I was pretty old confidering my years. Having resolved to buy a mule, I put my resolution in practice at the next village. I even converted my knapfack into a portmanteau, and began to assume a little more of the man of consequence. On the third day, I met a man singing vespers, as loud as he could roar, on the highway.

Judging, by his appearance, that he was a chanter, I accosted him with courage. "Signior batchelor, you fing purely, your heart goes with your profession, I see." "Sir, (answered he) I am a chanter at your service, and amuse myself with clearing my pipes, as you hear."

In this manner we entered into conversation, and I perceived that I had got in company with a most witty and agreeable fellow, about four or five and twenty years As he travelled on foot I made my mule walk flowly, that I might have the pleasure of conversing with him; and, among other things, the discourse turning on Toledo, " I know that city perfectly well, (faid the chanter) having lived a good while in it, and I believe have fome friends there." " In what place (anfwered I, interrupting him) did you live at Toledo?" He replied, " in the new freet. I lived with Don Vincent de Buena Garra, Don Matthias de Cordel, and two or three more gentlemen of honour : we lodged, eat, and passed our time agreeably together." These words furprized me; for it must be observed, that those gentlemen, whose names he mentioned, were the very sharpers with whom I had kept company at Toledo. "Signior chanter, (cried I) those gentlemen whom you have named, are of my acquaintance, and I lived with them in the new street." " 1 understand you, (he replied, smiling) that is to say, you are entered in the company, fince I left it three years ago." " I have (faid I) quitted these gentlemen, because I was feized with an inclination to travel. I intend to make the tour of Spain; knowing that I shall improve by experience." "Without doubt (he replied) one must travel before he can have a finished education: it was for this reason that I left Toledo, where I lived very agreeably. I thank heaven (added he) for having met, when I least expected it, a knight of my own order. Let us join, travel together, make attempts on our neighbour's purse, 'and lay hold of every occasion that presents itself of exerting our skill."

He made this proposal so frankly, and with such a good grace, that I accepted it. He won my confidence all of a sudden, in bestowing his upon me, and we un-

bosomed

bosomed ourselves to one another. I recounted my history to him, and he made no mystery of his adventures to me; letting me know, that he was just come from Portalegro, whence an unsuccessful trick had obliged him to escape with precipitation, in the dress he now wore. After he had communicated to me his whole affairs, we resolved to go to Merida together, in order to try our fortune, by ftriking some lucky stroke, if possible; and then immediately decamping, to remove ellewhere. From that moment our flock became common betwixt us; indeed Moralez (fo my companion was called) was not in a very brilliant lituation. His whole fortune confifted of five or fix ducats, with fome baggage that he carried in a wallet: but if I was richer than he, in ready money, he, on the other hand, was more consummate than I, in the art of deceiving mankind.

We mounted my mule by turns, and, in this manner, arrived at Merida, halted at inn of the suburbs, where my comrade took out of his wallet a dress, in which he was no fooner cloathed, than we went to take a turn through the town, reconnoitre the ground, and look for an opportunity of going to work. We confidered every object that presented itself, with great attention. and, as Homer would have faid, refembled two kites, that cast their eyes abroad, to look for birds on which to prey. In short, we waited, in hopes that chance would afford an occasion, on which we might employ our industry, when we perceived in the street, an old gray haired gentleman, fighting against three men, who pushed hard at him. I was shocked at the inequality of the combat, and, as I am naturally a tilter, flew to the affistance of the old man: Moralez following my example, we attacked the gentleman's three enemies, and obliged them to feek their fafety in flight.

The fenior was mighty thankful. "We are very glad (faid I to him) that we happened to be here so sea-sonably, to give you assistance: but let us know, at least, who we have had the good fortune to serve; and pray tell us, for what reason those three men would have assistanced you." "Gendemen, (he replied) I am too much obliged to result the satisfaction you desire. My name is Jerome de Moyadas, and I live on my fortune in this city: one of those affassins, from whom you have delivered me, made love to my daughter, asked her of me in marriage some days ago; and as he could not obtain my consent, attacked me sword in hand, in order to be revenged." " And may one alk (I replied) your reason for refusing your consent to that gentleman?" " I will tell you (faid he) I had a brother a merchant in this city, whose name was Augustin; two months ago he was at Calatrava, and lodged at the house of Juan Velez de Menbrilla, his correspondent, with whom he was so intimate, that, in order to strengthen their friendship still more he promised my only daughter Florentina in marriage to his fon, not doubting that he had credit enough with me to perform his promise. Accordingly, my brother, upon his return to Merida, no fooner mentioned the affair, than I, out of love to him, confented to the marriage. He then fent Florentina's picture to Calatrava; but alas! had not the fatisfaction of finishing the work, for he died three weeks ago; conjuring me, on his death-bed, to dispose of my daughter to none but his correspondent's son. This I promised, and on this account refused Florentina to the gentleman who affaulted me, although he is a very advantageous march. I am a flave to my word, and every moment expect the ion of Juan Velez de Menbrilla, on whom I will bestow my daughter in marriage, though I never faw either him or his father. I beg pardon, (continued Jerome de Moyadas) for troubling you with this relation: but you yourfelf exacted it of me."

I listened to him with great attention, and resolving upon a trick, that struck me in the head of a sudden, affected great astonishment, listed up my eyes to heaven, and turning towards the old man, said, in a pathetic tone, "Ah, Signior Moyadas! is it possible, that on my first arrival at Merida, I should be so happy as to save the life of my father-in-law!" The old citizen was strangely surprized at these words, as well as Moralez, who shewed by his countenance, what a great rogue he took me to be. "What do I hear? (replied the senior) how! are you the son of my brother's correspondent?" "Yes, Signior Jerome de Moyadas, (answered I, with an audacious countenance, while I threw my arms ahout his neck) I am that happy mortal for whom the adorable Florentina is destined. But before I express my joy in entering into your family, allow me to shed into your bosom the tears which the remembrance of your brother Augustin renews! I should be the most ungrateful of all mankind, if I was not fenfibly touched with the death of a person to whom I owe all the happiness of my life !" So faying, I again embraced honest Jerome, and covered my eyes with my hand, on pretence of wiping away Moralez, who, in a twinkling, perceived my tears. the advantage we might reap from a trick of this kind. did not fail to fecond the imposture, and passing for my valet, even topped me in the forrow I had manifested for the death of Signior Augustin. - Monsieur Jerome. (cried he) what a loss you have suffered in your brother's death! he was fuch an honest man! the very phænix of commerce, a difinterested merchant, a merchant of integrity; there are few of his fellows to be met with."

We had to do with a simple and credulous man, who. fo far from suspecting the cheat, was himself an affishant in it. " And why (faid he) did you not come straight to my house? you should not have gone to lodge at an inn : confidering the terms on which we are, no ceremony ought to have been observed." " Sir, (answered Moralez, taking upon him to speak for me) my master is, I grant you, a little ceremonious : not but that he is excusable in some shape, in being unwilling to appear before you in his present situation : for we have been robbed in our journey hither, and loft all our baggage." "The young man (faid I, interrupting him) tells you nothing but the truth, Signior de Moyadas. This miffortune did not permit me to come to your house: I durst not present myself in this garb, before the eyes of a mistress, who has not as yet seen me; and for that reason, I waited the return of a valet, whom I have sent to Calatrava." " This accident (replied the old man) ought not to have hindered you from coming to stay at my house, where I intend you shall immediately take up your lodging." So

it

So faying he carried me home with him; and by the way, we talked of the pretended robbery that I had fuffered, when I affured him, that what gave me the greatest concern, was my having lost, with my baggage. the picture of Florentina. Whereupon the citizen obferved, with a finile, that I must confole myself for that loss, the more easily, as the original was better than the copy. In effect, as foon as we came to his house, he called his daughter, who was not above fixteen years of age, and might have been counted an accomplished young lady, faying to me, " You fee the object which my late brother promised to you. " Ah, Signior! (cried I, with a passionate air) you have no occasion to tell me, that this is the amiable Florentina! these charming features are engraved on my memory, and fill more upon my heart. If the picture which I loft, and which was only a flight sketch of such perfection, could inflame me with the most ardent passion, judge how I must be transported at this moment !" " You flatter me too much, (said Florentina) for I am not vain enough to imagine, that my qualifications justify your discourse." " Go on with your compliments," (said the father.) At the same time, he left me alone with his daughter, and taking Moralez aside, " Friend, (said he to him) you have loft all your baggage then, and, without doubt, your money too." "Yes, Sir, (answered my comrade) a great number of banditti poured upon us near Castil Blazo, and left us nothing but the cloaths on our backs: but we shall in a very short time receive bills of exchange, which will fet all things to rights again."

"But until those bills arrive, (replied the old man, taking a purse out of his pocket) here are an hundred pistoles at your service." "O, Sir! (said Moralez) my master would not accept them for the world. I find you don't know him. Zooks! he is a man of great delicacy on these occasions. He is none of those sashionable youngsters, who are apt to take up from every body. He does not love to be in debt, and would rather beg his bread than borrow one farthing." "So much the better, (said the honest citizen) I esteem him the more on that account: I cannot bear to see young men contract debts: I pardon it indeed in people of quality; because it is a privilege they have possessed a long time. I won't (continued he) affront thy master, and since it will only give him pain to offer him money, we must say no more about it." With these words, he was going to put the purse in his pocket again, but my companion held his hand, saying, "Hold, Signior Moyadas, whatever aversion my master has to borrowing, I don't despair of prevailing upon him to accept your hundred pistoles? Tis only from strangers he is shy of borrowing: he is not so ceremonious with his own samily: he can even demand of his father, with a good grace, whatever money he has occasion for. The young gentleman, you perceive, knows how to distinguish persons, and ought to look upon you, Sir, as a second father."

Moralez, by such discourse, secured the purse of the old man, who came and rejoined us; and finding his daughter and me engaged in mutual compliments, interrupted our conversation, by telling Florentina the obligation he lay under to me; and, on that score, made me professions which convinced me of his gratitude. I laid hold of such a favourable disposition, and told the cirizen, that the most sensible mark of acknowledgement he could shew, would be to hasten my marriage with his daughter. He yielded, with a good grace, to my impatience, assuring me, that in three days at farthest I should be Florentina's husband, and that instead of six thousand ducats, which he had promised for her dower, he would give me ten, as a proof of his being deeply affected with the service I had done him.

Moralez and I, therefore, lived with the honest man Jerome de Moyadas, kindly treated, and in the agreeable expectation of ten thousand ducats, with which we proposed to make a sudden decampment from Merida. Our joy, however, was checked by fear: we were apprehensive, that in less than three days, the true son of Juan Velez de Menbrilla would arrive, and cross our good fortune.

This fear was by no means ill founded: for, the very next day, a kind of peafant, loaded with a portmanteau, came to the house of Florentina's father, when I was not at home, though my comrade was present. "Sir, (said the peasant to the old man) I belong to a young gentleman

tleman of Calatrava, called Signior de la Menbrilla, who is to be your fon-in-law. We are just arrived, and he will be here presently. I came before to give you notice of his approach." He had scarce spoke these words, when his master appeared: a circumstance that surprized the old man very much, and disconcerted Moralez a little.

Pedro, who was a very gen'eel young fellow, addressed himself to Florentina's father; but the honest citizen did not give him time to finish his discourse, and turning to my companion, asked the meaning of all this. Moralez, who was fecond to no man on earth in impudence, affumed an air of affurance, and faid to the old man, " Sir, these two men belong to the troop of thieves, who robbed us on the highway: I recollect them both very well, particularly him who has the audacity to call himself the son of Signior Juan Velez de la Menbrilla." The old citizen believed Moralez, and, perfuaded that the strangers were cheats, said to them, "Gentlemen, you come too late: your scheme is prevented; Pedro de la Menbrilla has been in my house fince yesterday." " Take care of what you say, (anfwered the young man of Calatrava) you have got an impostor in your family; for you must know, that Juan Velez de Menbrilla has no other fon than me." " I know better, (replied the old man) and am not ignorant of your profession: don't you recollect this young man, and remember his master, whom you robbed?" If I was not in your house, (faid Pedro) I would punish the insolence of that cheat, who has the presumption to call me a robber. Let him thank your presence, that restrains my indignation. Sir (added he) you are imposed upon. I am the young man to whom your brother Augustin promited his niece. If you defire it, I can shew all the letters which he wrote to my father on the fubject of the marriage. Will you not believe it when you fee the picture of Florentina, which he fent to me some time before his death?"

"No, (said the old citizen, interrupting him) neither the picture nor the letters will convince me: I know very well in what manner they fell into your hands, and I advise you, as a friend, to be gone from Merida as

foon

foc

ge

itc

hi

1

pr

hi

na

W

h

foon as you can." "This is too much (cried the young genrleman in his turn) I will not fuffer my name to be stolen with impunity, nor myself to be treated like an highwayman. I know some people in this place, whom I will find, and return to confound the impostor that has prejudiced you against me." So saying, he retired with his valet, and Moralez remained master of the field: nay, this adventure made Jerome de Moyadas resolve to have the marriage celebrated that very day, and he went out instantly, to give the necessary orders for the occasion.

Though my comrade was very well pleased to see Florentina's father in a disposition so savourable for us, he was far from being perfectly at ease; fearing the confequence of the measures which he concluded Pedro would certainly take; and he waited for me with impatience, to communicate what had happened. Finding him, at my return, plunged in a profound reverie, " What is the matter friend? (said I) thou seemelt in a brown study," He replied, " If I am, it is not without reason." And informed me of the whole affar; adding, " Thou feeft what cause I have to muse. It was thou alone, who rashly threw us into this dilemma It was a shining enterprize, I own, and would have crowned thee with g'ory, had it fucceeded: but, in all appearance, it will end ill; and it is my advice, that in order to prevent explanations we immediately betake ourselves, to our heels, with the feather which we have plucked from the honest man's wing."

"Mr. Moralez, (answered I to this proposal) you yield to difficulties, I find, very soon, and don't do a great deal of honour to Don Mathias de Cordel, and the other cavaliers, with whom you lived at Toledo: one who has served his apprenticeship under such able masters, ought not to be easily alarmed. As for me, who intend to walk in the steps of these heroes, and prove myself a worthy pupil, I will bear up against the obstacle that terrifies you, and make my utmost effort to surmount it." "If you accomplish that, (said my companion) I will prefer you to all the great men in Plutarch."

Just as Moralez had done speaking, Jerome de Movadas coming in, faid to me, " You shall be my fon inlaw this very evening: your fervant (I suppose) has told you what happened. What do you think of the impudence of the rogue, who would have made me believe that he was the fon of my brother's correspondent?" " Signior, (answered I, in a melancholy tone, and with the most ingenuous air I could affect) I find I ain not qualified to carry on deceit. I must fincerely own that I am not the son of Juan Velez de Menbrilia." " What do I hear! (cried the old man, interrupting me with equal precipitation and furprize) how! you not the young man, to whom my brother"-" Pray, Sir, (faid I, interrupting him in my turn) be fo good as to hear me to an end. I have loved your daughter these eight days, during which, my passion has detained me at Merida; and yesterday, after having come to your assistance, I was about to demand her in marriage, when you flopt my mouth, by giving me to understand, that she was destined for another. You told me, that your brother in his last moments, conjured you to bestow her upon Pedro de la Menbrilla; that you promifed to comply with his request, and, in short, that you was a slave to your word. This information, I confess, overwhelmed me, and my love, reduced to despair, inspired me with the stratagem I put in practice. I must tell you, however, that I fecretly upbraided myfelf with the trick I had put upon you; but I flattered myself that you would forgive it, when I should have discovered it, and convinced you, that I am an Italian prince, who travel incognito; and that my father is fovereign of certain vallies fituated between the Swiss, the Milanese and Savoy. I imagined that you would be agreeably furprized, when I should have revealed my birth; and I felt all the pleasure of a delicate and passionate husband, in the hope of declaring it to Florentina, after our marriage. Heaven, (added I, changing my tone) would not indulge me in so much joy: Pedro de la Menbrilla appears, and I must restore him his name, how much soever the restitution will cost me. You are engaged, by your promise to choose him for a son-in-law; and it is your duty to prefer him to me, without regard to my sank, 10 or compassion for the cruel situation to which you are going to reduce me. I will not pretend to represent, that your brother was only the uncle of your daughter, and that you being her father, it is more just to acquit yourself of the obligation you owe me, than to make it a point of honour to keep a promise, which is but flightly binding."

"Yes, doubtless, it is so! (cried Jerome de Moyadas) therefore I do not intend to helitate between you and Don Pedro de Menbrilla. If my brother Augustin was fill alive, he would not blame me for giving the preference to a man who faved my life, and who is moreover, a prince, who does not disdain to ask my alliance. I must be an enemy to my own happiness, and entirely deprived of my understanding, if I did not give you my daughter, and even press the celebration of the marriage." " But Signior, (I replied) do nothing impetuously, confult your interest only, and, notwithstanding the nobility of my blood,"-- "Sure you jest! (said he, interrupting me) ought I to hefitate one moment? No, my prince, I most humbly befeech you to henour the happy Florentina with your hand, this very evening." "Well, " (faid I) be it fo; go carry the news yourfelf and inform her of her glorious fate."

While the honest citizen flew eagerly to tell his daughter, that she had made the conquest of a prince, Moralez, who had heard the whole conversation, threw himself on his knees before me, saying, " Monsignior the Italian prince, fon of a fovereign of the vallies fituated between the Swifs, Milanese and Savoy, give me leave to embrace the feet of your highness, and testify the excessive joy I feel. Upon the faith of a knave, I look upon you as a prodigy! I thought myself the first man in the world, but truly I strike to you, although you have less experience than I." "What, you are no longer uneasy, I hope," (iaid I to him) " O! not at all, answered he) I am no longer afraid of Signior Pedro; let him come again as foon as he pleafes." Moralez and I being now firm fet in the stirrups, began to regulate the course we should take with the dowry, on which we depended fo much, that we could not have thought ourselves more secure of it, had it been already in our pockets. We had not, as yet, got it, for all that, and the catastrophe of the adventure did not anfwer our expectation.

In a little time, the young man of Calatrava returned, accompanied by two citizens and an alguazil, as formidable on ac ount of his whifkers and fwarthy complexion, as of his employment. Florentina's father being prefent, " Signior de Moyadas, (said Pedro to him) I have brought hither three credible people, who know me, and can tell you who I am." " Yes, fure, (cried the alguazil) I can tell, and I certify to all whom it may concern, that I know you. Your name is Pedro, and you are the only fon of Juan Velez de la Menbrilla: whoever maintains the contrary is an impostor. believe you, Mr. Alguazil, (said the honest man Jerome de Moyadas) your evidence is facred with me, as well as that of the gentlemen merchants, who are along with I am fully convinced that the young cavalier, who conducted you hither, is the only fon of my brother's correspondent: but that does not fignify, I am no longer in the mind to give him my daughter."

" Oho! that's another affair, (said the alguazil) I came hither only to affure you, that I know this young man. You are master of your child, and no body can compel you to part with her against your inclination." " Nor do I intend, (faid Pedro, interrupting him) to offer violence to the inclination of Signior de Moyadas; but he will give me leave to ask why he has changed his fentiments, or if he has any cause to complain of me. Let me be affured, at leaft, that I have not loft the sweet hope of being his son-in-law by my own milbehaviour." " I have no cause to complain of you, (replied the old man) and will even own, that it is with regret I fee myfelf under a necessity of breaking my word, for which I conjure you to forgive me. I am persuaded that you are too generous to take it amiss, that I prefer to you a rival, who has faved my life. Here he is, (pursued he, shewing me to the company) this is the person who refcued me from the most imminent danger; and that my excuse may have still more force, I must inform you he is no less than an Italian prince."

At

fo

t

1

1

At these last words, Pedro became mute and confounded; the two merchants stared with the utmost furprize: but the alguazil, accustomed to look upon the worst side of every thing, suspected this wonderful adventure to be a trick, that might turn out to his advantage; he eyed me very attentively, and his goodwill being baffled by my features, which were utterly unknown to him, he examined my comrade with the fame attention. Unluckily for my highness, he recollected Moralez, and remembering to have fen him in the prison of Ciudad Real, " Ah ha! (cried he) here is one of my customers: I remember this gentleman who, I affure you, is one of the most periect sharpers within the kingdoms and principalities of Spain." " Softly, Mr. Alguazil, (said Jerome de Moyadas) the young man, whom you paint fo disadvantageously, is the domestic of a prince." " Very well, (replied the alguazil) I know enough to form my resolution accordingly, and judge of the master by the man. I don't doubt that these gallants are two cheats, who have agreed to impose upon you. I know how to manage in such cases; and to let you fee that these wits are adventurers, I will carry them instantly to gaol. I intend to introduce them to a private conversation with Monsieur the Corregidor; after which, they will feel that whipping is not yet out of fashion." " Hold there, master officer, (replied the old man) don't let us push matters so far: people of your profession are not afraid of giving pain to a worthy man. May not this valet be a rogue, and his mafter a man of honour? Is it a new thing to fee sharpers in the service of princes?" "You joke with your princes, (faid the alguazil) this young fellow is a knight of the post, you may depend upon it, and I arrest him and his comrade in the king's name. I have twenty foldiers at the door, who shall drag them to prison, if they refuse to go with a good grace. Come, my prince, (addressing himself to me) let us march."

I was thunderstruck at these words, as well as Moralez, and our concern rendered us suspected to Jerome de Moyadas; or rather convinced him, that we actually had a design to design him. On this occasion, however.

ho

to

th

n

h

however, he behaved like a gallant man; faying to the alguazil, "Master officer, perhaps your suspicions are false, and perhaps they are but too true. Be it as it will, let us dive no farther into the affair: let these two young cavaliers retire wheresoever they please to go, and I beg you will not oppose their retreat: it is a favour I ask, in order to acquit myself of the obligation I owe to them. "Were I strictly to do my duty, (answered the alguazil) I should imprison these gentlemen, without having any regard to your in reaty; but, for your sake, I will relax a little, provided that they quit the town this instant: for if I meet them to morrow, egad! they shall fee what will become of them."

When Moralez and I understood that we were free, we recollected ourselves a little, endeavoured to talk boldly, and affirm that we were persons of honour; but the alguazil filenced us with a fierce look; and I don't know how these people have an ascendant over us. We were obliged, therefore, to abandon Florentina and her portion to Pedro de la Menbrilla, who doubtless, became the fon-in-law of Jerome de Moyadas, and retire with all speed, taking the road to Truxillo, with the consolation of having, at least, got an hundred pistoles by the adventure. About an hour before night, passing by a little village, with a resolution of going farther before we should halt, we perceived an inn, of a pretty good appearance for that place, and the landlord, with his wife fitting on long stones at the door. The husband, a tall, meagre, old fellow, thrumm'd upon a wretched guitarre, for the diversion of his wife, who feemed to listen with pleasure. " Gentlemen,) cried the landlord, when he saw we did not stop) I advise you to halt at this place: you won't find a village within three weary leagnes of this; and even there, I affure you, you won't be fo well ferved as here: take my word for it, and walk into my house, where I will entertain you handsomely, at a reasonable rate." We suffered ourselves to be persuaded, and approaching the man and his wife, bid them good even; and having feated ourselves by them, began, all four, to talk of indifferent subjects. The The landlord said he was an officer of the holy brother-hood, and his wife was a fat merry dame, who seemed to understand very well how to vend her commodities.

Our conversation was interrupted by the arrival of twelve or fifteen cavaliers, some mounted on mules. and some on horseback, followed by thirty baggage moyls loaded with bales. " Ah! what a number of princes! (cried the landlord, at fight of so many people) where shall I find lodging for them all?" In a moment the village was crowded with men and beafts. was luckily, near the inn, a vast barn, in which the moyls and the baggage were disposed: the mules and horses belonging to the cavaliers, were put in other places; and as for the men, they did not concern themselves so much about finding beds, as in bespeaking a good supper. The landlord, his wife, and a young maid-fervant belonging to the house, were not idle; they flaughtered all the poultry in their yard, which joined to fome ragouts made of rabbits and cats, and a plentiful dish of soup, composed of collishowers and mutton, furnished entertainment enough for the whole company.

Moralez and I looked at the cavaliers, who, from time to time, eyed us also. At last, we entered into conversation, and told them, that if it was agreeable They affured us, that we we would fup in company. could not do them a greater pleature: fo we fat down all together at table. There was one among them who feemed to be the chief, and for whom the rest, though otherwise very familiar, did not fail to shew some deference: 'tis true, indeed, he kept the upper end, talked in an elevated tone of voice, and even contradicted, fometimes, in a cavalier manner, the fentiments of the reft, who, far from replying in the same manner to him. feemed to respect his opinions. The discourse falling, by accident, on Andalusia; and Moralez taking it into his head to praite Seville, this man faid to him, " Signior cavalier, you are making the elogium of the city where I first drew breath, or, at least, I was born in its neighbourhood, fince the town of Mayrena gave me to the world." " I can fay the same thing, (answered my companion) companion) I was likewise born at Mayrena, and I must certainly know your parents: pray, whose son are you?" " I am (said the cavalier) the son of an honest notary, called Martin Moralez." "Upon my fai h! (cried my comrade, with emotion) the adventure is extremely fingular: you are then my eldelt brother, Manuel Motalez." "The very same, (said the other) and you are, I suppose, my young brother Lewis, whom I left in the cradle, when I quitted my father's house?" "That is my name, indeed," (replied my comrade.) Upon which they both got up, and embraced one another with great affection. Then Signior Manuel said to the company, "Gentlemen, this event is altogether marvellous! I have by accident, met and discovered a brother, whom I have not feen thefe twenty years and more: allow me to prefent him to the company." All the cavaliers, who kept themselves standing, out of complaifance, faluted the young Moralez, and loaded him with careffes. Afterwards, we fat down again at table, where we remained all night, without going to bed; the two brothers fitting by one another, and conversing, by themselves, about their family, while the other guests drank and made merry.

Lewis, after a long conversation with Manuel, taking me aside, said, "All these cavaliers are domestics of the Count de Montanos, whom the king has lately named for viceroy of Majorca. They are conducting their Master's equipage to Alicant, where they are to embark. My brother, who is become steward to that nobleman, has proposed to carry me along with him; and, on account of the reluctance I expressed in leaving you, told me, that, if you would accompany us, he would procure for you a good employment. Dear friend, (added he) I advise thee not to distain the offer: let us go together to the island of Majorca; if we find it agree ble, we will stay there, and if we shall be displeased with our fituation, we will return to Spain."

I willingly embraced the proposal; young Moralez and I joined the count's officers, and set out with them from the inn, before day. Having, by long marches, gained air

gained the city of Alicant, I bought a guitarre, and took off a handsome suit of cloaths, before our embarkation; thinking of nothing but the island of Maiorca, and Lewis Moralez was in the same disposition. We feemed to have renounced sharping altogether. To tell you the truth, we had a mind to pass for persons of honour among the cavaliers in whose company we were; and that kept a check upon our geniuses. At last we went merrily on board, flattering ourselves with the hopes of being at Majorca in a very little time: but scarce had we cleared the gulph of Alicant, when a terrible tempest arose. I might, in this place of my relation, take an opportunity to make a fine description of the storm; to paint the air all on fire, to make the thunder roar, the winds whiftle, the mountain billows roll, &c. But all these flowers of rhetoric apart, I asfure you the hurricane was violent, and obliged us to bear away for the point of the island of Cabrera, a defert isle, in which there is a little fort, at that time garrisoned by an officer, and five or fix soldiers, who gave us a very hospitable reception.

As we were obliged to stay there several days, in order to repair our fails and tackle, we invented different kinds of amusements, to pass the time agreeably. Each followed his own inclinations: Some played at Primero, others fought different diversions, and I went to walk through the island, accompanied by those who loved fuch exercise. We skipt from rock to rock; for the ground was very uneven, full of flones, and very deficient in good soil. One day, when we considered these parched, withered places, and admired the caprice of nature, that shews herself fruitful or barren, as the pleases, our noses were invaded, all of a sudden, with a most agreeable smell. We immediately turned to the eastward, from whence that odour came, and perceived, with aftonishment, among the rocks, a large, round, green spot, surrounded with honeysuckles, even more beautiful and sweet-scented than those that grow in Andalusia. We approached with pleasure, those charming shrubs, which persumed the

y

0

it

;

g

d.

us

aed

ez

em

es, ned air all round, and found that they bordered upon the entry of a very deep cavern, which being large and light, we descended to the bottom of it, turning by steps of stone, the ends of which were adorned with slowers, the whole forming a natural winding staircase. When we had got down, we saw several little rills of water, which derived their sources from drops that incessantly distilled from the rocks within, creeping along sand more yellow than gold, and losing themselves in the earth.—The water seemed so pure, that we were tempted to drink, and found it so fresh, that we resolved to return next day to the same place, with some bottles of wine, perswaded that we should empty them with vast pleasure.

It was with regret we quitted fuch an agreeable place, and, when we went back to the fort, we did not fail to boast of our discovery; but the commandant cautioned us, as a triend, against returning to the cavern, with which we were so much charmed. " For what? (said I to him) is there any thing to fear?" " Yes, without doubt, (he replied:) the corfairs of Algiers and Tripoli fometimes land on this ifle, to water at that fpring, and one day surprized two soldiers of my garrison, whom they made flaves." It was in vain for the officer to tell us this with a very ferious air: he could not perfuade us; for we believed that he jested: and next day I returned to the cavern, with three more of my companions, without providing ourselves with fire-arms, to shew that we dreaded nothing. Young Moralez would not be of the party, choosing rather to stay with his brother, and play in the fort.

Having descended, as the day before, to the bottom of the cave, we cool'd some bottles of wine, that we had brought along with us, in the rivulets; and while we drank them deliciously, playing on the guitarre, and conversing pleasantly together, we saw several men appear at the mouth of the cavern above, with large whiskers, turbans, and Turkish dress.—
We imagined that it was a part of the Count's domestics, with the commandant of the fort, who had thus disguised themselves in order to frighten us; and,

prepossessed

preposses with this fancy, began to laugh, letting no less than ten of them come down, without thinking of defending ourselves. We were, however, soon undeceived in a melancholy manner, and convinced that it was a corsair, who came with his people to carry us off.—" Surrender, you dogs, (he cried, in the Castilian tongue) or you shall all be put to the sword." At the same time his followers presented their carabines to us, and we should have undergone a fine discharge, had we made the least resistance.—We preserr'd slavery to death, and gave our swords to the pirate, who ordered us to be loaded with chains, and conducted to his vessel, which was not far off: then setting sail, he steered with a sair wind towards Algiers.

.

t

h

o

h

d

it

li

d

m

11

le

-5

1-

W

ot

٢,

t-

e,

S;

ne

W

e,

_

0-ad

d.

ed

In this manner were we punished for neglecting the caution of the officer of the garrison. The first thing that the corfair did, was to rifle us of all the money we had. -- What a fine windfall for him! The two hundred pittoles taken from the young citizens of Placentia; the hundred which Moralez had received from Jerome de Moyadas, and which unluckily I had about me, were all fwept away without mercy. My companions had also their purses well furnished. In short, it was an excellent prize. The pirate was rejoiced at his good luck; and the rascal, not satisfied with our plunder, insulted us with his raillery, which we did not feel half so much as the necessity that compelled us to bear it. - After a thousand jokes, he ordered the bottles of wine which we had cooled at the fountain, and which his people had taken care to feize, to be brought to him, and began to empty them with his crew, drinking to our health, by way of derision.

During this conjuncture, the countenances of my comrades express'd the pain they felt; and their flavery mortified them the more, because they had formed the most delightful idea of their voyage to the island of Majorca, where they had laid their account with leading a most delicious life.—As for me, I had fortitude enough to project a plan of conduct for myself; and, less atraid than my fellows, entered into conversation with the rallier, and even returned his jokes with a good grace. Pleased with my behaviour, "Young Yor, II.

man, (faid he) I like thy disposition; for, in the main, instead of fighing and groaning, it is better for one to arm himself with patience, and fail with the stream. Play to us a small air, (added he, observing that I had a guitarre) let us fee what thou canst do." I obeyed him, as foon as he had ordered my arms to be unchained, and began to thrum upon my guitarre in fuch a manner as acquired his applause. - I had, indeed, learned under the best master in Madrid, and played on that instrument pretty well .- I fang likewise, and my voice gave no less satisfaction. — All the Turks in the vessel express'd the pleasure they felt in hearing me, by gestures of adadmiration: a circumstance from which I concluded, that their tafte for mufick was not extremely delicate. The pirate whilper'd to me, that I should not be an unhappy flave; and that one of my talents might depend upon antemployment that would make my captivity very supportable.

I felt fome joy at these words; but flattering as they were, I had abundance of uneasiness on the score of this occupation, with the promise of which the corfair regaled me. When we arrived at the port of Algiers*, we saw a great number of people assembled to receive us, who as soon as we were landed shouted with joy: besides, the air resounded with the consused noise of trumpets, morisco slutes, and other instruments used in that country, which formed a symphony more loud than agreeable. The cause of these rejoicings was a false report which had spread thro' the city, importing that the renegado Mehemet (this was our pirate's name) had perished in attacking a large Genoese vessel: so that all his friends, informed of his return, were eager in their expressions of joy.

We had no fooner fet foot on shore, than I and my companions were conducted to the palace of Dey Solyman, where a Christian secretary, examining us one by one, asked our names, ages, country, religion, ^{*} Algiers, a city on the coast of Barbary, possessed by the Moors, who are at perpetual war with the Spaniards; and under the protection of the Turk.

and qualifications. Then Mehemet, shewing me to the Dey, extolled my voice, and affured him, that I play'd ravishingly on the guitarre. This was enough to determine Solyman to chuse me for his own fervice: accordingly I was detained in his feraglio, while the other captives were led into a publick place, and fold according to custom. What Mehemet had foretold to me in the vessel, came to pass --- My condition was very happy; far from being abandoned to jailors, or employed in laborious work, I was by order of Solyman, disposed of in a particular place, with five or fix flaves of quality, who expected every moment to be redeemed, and whose talks were far from being painful. My bufiness was to water the orange-trees and flowers in the garden, and I could not have been favoured with a more agrecable occupation.

Solyman was a man about forty years of age, well shaped, very polite, and, for a Turk, mighty gallant. His chief favourite was a Cachemirian * woman, who, by her understanding and beauty, had acquired an abfolute dominion over him. — He loved her even to adoration, and treated her every day with fome entertainment or other; fometimes with a concert of vocal and instrumental musick, and sometimes with a comedy in the Turkish taste; that is to fay, a dramatic poem. in which modelly and decorum were as little regarded as the rules of Aristotle. The favourite, whose name was Farrukhnaz, was passionately fond of these diversions, and even made her women sometimes represent Arabian pieces before the Dey: wherein she herself played a part, and charmed all the spectators by the grace and vivacity of her action. I being one day, among the musicians, at a representation of this kind, Solyman ordered me to play upon the guitarre, and fing alone between the acts. I had the good fortune to please, was very much applauded, and the favourite seemed to look upon me with a favourable eye.

^{*} Cachemire, is a country under the dominion of the great Mogul, called the Indian Paradile; remarkable for the beauty and wit of its women. The

The very next day, while I was busied in watering the orange trees in the garden, an eunuch passing by me, without stopping or speaking one word, dropt a billet at my feet: I took it up in a consusion made up of sear and joy ——I lay down upon the ground that I might not be seen from the windows of the teraglio; and concealing myself behind the boxes in which the orange-trees were planted, opened the letter, in which I found a pretty valuable diamond, and these words in good Castilian:

"YOUNG Christian, thank heaven for thy captivity.—Love and fortune will make thee happy: love, if thou art fensible to the charms of a beautiful woman; and fortune, if thou hast courage to despite the greatest danger."

I did not in the least, doubt that the letter came from the favourite Sultana: the ftyle and diamond perfunded me, that she must have been the author. Befides that I am not naturally very timorous, the vanity of being in the good graces of a Grand Signior's mittress, and, more than that, the hope of getting from her four times as much money as would be necessary for my ranfom, made me form the defign of atchieving that adventure, whatever dangers might attend it. I continued my work, musing upon the means of entering the apartment of Fartukhnaz, or rather expecting that she would pave the way; for I concluded that she would not stop there, but at least be at more than half the trouble. I was not mistaken: the same eunuch, that passed me before, repassed an hour after, and said, " Christian, hast thou confidered; and wilt thou have the boldness to follow me?"-I answered, "Yes." He replied, "Very well: heaven preserve thee- Thou thalt see me again to-morrow morning." So faying, he retired-Next day he appeared accordingly about eight in the morning, and beckoned me to him. I obeyed the fignal, and he conducted me into a hall, where there was a large piece of linen, which another cunuch and he had brought thither, thither, and which they were to carry to the Sultana, for the decoration of an Arabian piece, that she was preparing for the entertainment of the Dey.

The two eunuchs, having spread out the cloth, laid me along within it, and at the hazard of my being fuffocated, rolled it up again with me in the middle: then, each taking one end of it, carried me thus, unquestioned, into the bed chamber of the fair Cachemirian, who had nobody with her but an old flave, devoted to her pleasure. When the two unrolled the cloth, Farrukhnaz, at fight of me broke out into transports of joy, that well discovered the genius of women in that country-Bold as I naturally was, I could not fee myself transported, all of a sudden into the secret apartment of the women, without being feized with fear. The lady easily perceiving it, and in order to diffipate my apprehension, faid, "Young man, fear nothing: Solyman is gone to his country-house, where he will remain all day; fo that we may converse together freely."

Encouraged by these words, I assumed a look that redoubled the favourite's joy. "I am pleafed with your person, (said she) and intend to soften the rigour of your flavery: I believe you worthy of the fentiments I have conceived for you; for tho' you are in the drefs of a flave, you have a noble and gallant air, that thews you are not of the vulgar. Speak freely, and tell me who you are-I know that captives of a noble birth difguise their rank, that they may be redeemed at an easier rate; but you have no occasion to behave in that manner with me: I should even be affronted at such a precaution, fince I promife to fet you at liberty. - Be fincere, therefore, and confess that you are a young man of a good family." " Truly, madam, (I replied) it would be ingratitude in me to repay your generofity with diffimulation; and fince you absolutely charge me to reveal my quality, you must be satisfied. I am the son of a Spanish grandee "-Perhaps I spoke truth: at least the Sultana believed it; and, pleased that she had thrown her eyes upon a gentleman of importance, affured me that it should not be her fault, if we did not see one another Q 3

I

e

another often in private.—We had a pretty long converfation, and I never faw a more engaging woman: she understood several languages, especially the Castilian, which she spoke pretty well. When she judged it time for us to part, I went, by her order, into an ozier basket, covered with a flowered silk, the work of her own hand. Then the two slaves, who brought me in, were called, and carried me out as a present from the favourite to the Dey: A thing sacred from all the men, who are intrusted with the guard of the women.

Farrukhnaz and I found other means of feeing one another; and that amiable captive inspired me with almost as much love for her, as she had for me. Our intelligence remained fecret during two months; altho' it is very difficult in a feraglio, to conceal the mysteries of love so long, from the Argus's that watch it. But an unlucky accident disconcerted our small affairs, and my fortune was intirely changed. One day, when I had been introduced to the Sultana, in the body of an artificial dragon, that was made for a shew, and was conversing with her, Solyman, who, I imagined was busy in the country, interrupted us, and entered so hastily into the apartment of his favourite, that the old flave fearce had time to advertise us of his arrival. Confequently, I had no leifure to conceal myfelf, and therefore was the first object that presented itself to the view of the Dey.

He seemed astonished at sight of me, and his eyes kindled with sury. I looked upon myself as one that touched his last moment, and already imagined myself under the torture. As for Farrukhnaz, I perceived that the was terrished indeed: but instead of owning her crime and asking pardon, she said to Solyman, "Signior, before you pronounce my sentence, deign to hear my desence: appearances, doubtless, condemn me, and I seem to have committed a piece of treason worthy of the most horrible chastisement. I have brought this young captive hither, and in order to introduce him into my apartment, have used the same artisize which I would have employed, if I had entertained a violent passion for him. Nevertheless, I take our holy prophet to witness, that notwithstanding this conduct, I am not unfaithful. I had a mind to converse with this christian slave, in order to detach him from his sect, and engage him to follow that of the believers. I have sound in him such a resistance as I expected; but however, I have conquered his prejudice, and he has promised to embrace Mahometanism."

I own I ought to have contradicted the favourite. without any regard to the dangerous conjuncture in which I was: but being in the utmost dejection of spirit, affected with the danger in which I saw a woman whom I loved, and trembling for myself, I remained speechless and consused: I could not utter one word. and the Dey persuaded by my silence, that his mittress faid nothing but the truth, was appealed. " Madam, (faid he) I am willing to believe that you have not injured me, and that a defire of doing a thing agreeable to the prophet, has engaged you to hazard fuch a delicate action. I forgive your imprudence, therefore, provided that this captive takes the turban immediately." He fent for a Marabou * that instant, I was cloathed with a Turkish dress, and did all that was required, without having power to refit. Or rather, I was ignorant of what I did, fo much were my fenses disordered. How many christians are there, who would have been as base as I was, on such an occasion!

After the ceremony, I quitted the feraglio, under the name of Sidy Hali, to exercise a small employment bestowed upon me by Solyman. I never saw the Sultana again; but one of her eunuchs coming to me one day, brought from her a present of jewels worth two thousand sultanins of gold, with a billet, in which the lady afforded me, that she would never forget my generous complailance, in suffering myself to be made a Mahometan in order to save her life. Truly, besides the presents I received from Farrukhnaz, I obtained, through her canal, an employment more considerable than the first, and in less than seven years, became one of the richest tenegadoes in the city of Algiers.

* Marabous, are Mahometan priests.

You may well believe, that if I affifted at the prayers which the mustulmen put up in their mosques, and fulfilled the other duties of their religion, it was only out of pure grimace. I preferved a determined refolution to re-enter into the bosom of the church; and for that purpose, to withdraw one day, into Spain or Italy, with the riches which I should amass. In the mean time I lived very agreeably; was lodged in a fine house, had superb gardens, a great number of slaves, and very handsome women in my seraglio. Though the use of wine is forbid in that country to Mahometans, they don't fail, for the most part, to drink it in private. my own part, I drank it without ceremony, as almost all renegadoes do. I remember I had two companions with whom I often committed a debauch in the night. One was a lew; the other an Arabian, and both as I imagined, honest men; so that I lived with them in the greatest familiarity. One evening, I invited them to fupper, and a dog, of which I was passionately fond, having died that day, we bathed his body, and buried it with all the ceremony that is observed at the funerals of the Mahometans. In so doing, we had no intention to ridicule the muffulman religion; but only to amuse ourselves, and gratify a foolish whim that seized us in the middle of our debauch, to render the last duties to my dog.

This action, however, had well nigh ruined me. Next day, a man came to my house, and said, "Signior Sidy Hali. I am come hither on an important affair. The Cady * wants to speak with you; take the trouble, if you please, to go to his house immediately: an Arabian merchant who supped with you last night, has informed him of a certain impiety committed by you, with regard to a dog which you buried. For this reason I summon you to appear this day before that judge, otherwise I give you notice that you will be proceeded against in a criminal manner." So saying, he went away, leaving me thunderstruck with this citation. The Arabian mafter,

^{*} The Cady is the civil magistrate in every town in Turkey.

had no cause to complain of me, and I could not comprehend the traitor's reason for playing me this trick. Nevertheless, the thing was not to be neglected. knew the Cady was a man fevere in appearance, but not at all scrupulous at bottom; so I put two hundred sultanins of gold in my purse, and repaired to his house. He arried me into his closer, and faid, with a stern look, "You care an impious, facrilegious, and abominable: man: you have interred a dog like a musfulman: what horrid profanation! Is it thus then you regard our most facred ceremonies? and did you become a Mahometan. only to make a jest of our worship?" " Mr. Cady, (I replied) the Arabian who has made fuch a malicious report of me, that false friend is an accomplice of my crime. If it be a crime to grant the honours of burial to a faithful domestic-an animal that possessed a thousand good qualities. He loved people of merit and diffinction so much, that even in his last moments, as a testimony of his friendship, he has left them his whole fortune by a will, of which I am the sole executor. He bequeaths twenty crowns to one, thirty to another, and, Sir, he has not forgot you, (added I, taking out my purse) here are two hundred sultanins of gold which he charged me to give you." The Cady losing his gravity at this discourse, could not help laughing, and as we were alone, took the purfe without ceremony, faying, while he dismissed me, " Go, Signior Sidy Hali, you have done well, to inter with pomp and honour, a dog who had so much consideration for persons of worth."

By these means I extricated myself out of this affair, which is it did not make me more wise, rendered me at least more circumspect for the future. I no longer drank with the Arabian, nor even with the Jew; but chose for a companion at my cups, a young gentleman of Leghorn called Azarini, who was my own slave: I was not like the rest of the renegadoes, who are more cruel to christian slaves than the Turks themselves; all my captives waited very patiently for their redemption; and indeed I treated them so gently, that sometimes, they told me, they were more assaid of changing their master, than desirous of liberty, whatever charms it has

Q 5

for people in a state of bondage.

One day, the Dey's vessels returned with considera. ble prizes, bringing in more than an hundred flaves of both sexes, whom they had taken on the coasts of Spain. Solyman kept but a very small number, and the rest were exposed to fale: I arrived in the market-place, and bought a Spanish girl about ten or twelve years old, who wept bitterly and seemed in despair. I was surpised to fee one of her age so sensible of captivity; and bid her, in Castilian, moderate her affliction, affuring her, that he had fallen into the hands of a master who did not want humanity, though he wore a turban. The young creature, whose mind was still engrossed by her forrow, did not hear what I faid: fhe did nothing but fob, complain of her fate, and from time to time, cry with a piteous accent, " O my mother! why are we separated? I should have patience were we together." In pronouncing thefe words, she turned her eyes towards a woman between forty and fifty years of age, who stood a few paces from her, and with a downcast look, waited in fullen silence, until somebody should purchase her. I asked the young girl, if the person she looked at was her mother. "Yes, alas! Signior, (she replied) in the name of God, do not part us." "Well, my child, (said I) if it is necessary for your consolation that you should be together, you shall soon be satisfied." At the fame time, I approached the mother, in order to bid for her: but I no sooner beheld her face, than I recollected with all the emotion you can imagine, the features, the individual countenance of Lucinda! " Just heaven! (faid I to myself) 'tis my own mother! 'tis, doubtles, the herfelf! As for her, whether the deep affliction occasioned by her missortunes, made all the objects that furrounded her appear to her as enemies; or that my dress disguised me; or rather, that I was much altered in twelve years, during which she had not seen me, I know not, but she did not at all remember me."

Having bought her also, I carried them both to my house, where designing to give them the pleasure of knowing who I was, "Madam, (said I to Lucinda) is it possible that my features do not strike you? Have my whiskers and turban disguised me so much, that you do not know your fon Raphael?" My mother flarting at these words, considered my countenance, recollected me, and we embraced one another with great tenderness I then embraced her daughter, who perhaps, knew no more of having a brother, than I of having a fifter. " Confes (said I to my mother) that in all your theatrical pieces, you have not a recognition fo original as this." " Son, (answered she fighing) I was at first rejoiced to fee you again, but now my joy is converted into grief. In what a fituation, alas! do I find you? My flavery gives me a thousand times less pain, than that odious dress." " In good faith! madam, (said I, interrupting her with a laugh) I admire your delicacy, which to be fure is very commendable in an actress: why, good God! mother, you must be greatly altered, if my metamorphofis, offends you so much? Instead of finding fault with my turban, look upon me rather as an actor who plays the part of a Turk, upon the stage: though I am a renegado, I am no more a musfulman now, than when I was in Spain; and at bottom I feel myself still attached to my religion: when you shall know the adventures that have happened to me in this country, you will excuse my conduct. Love was my crime; and I facrifice to that deity: I am somewhat of your disposition I affure you. There is still another reason, (added 1) which ought to moderate your displeasure in seeing me thus fituated. You expected to fuffer in Algiers a rigorous captivity; and you find in your master, a fon, tender, respectful, and rich enough to maintain you here in abundance, until we can lay hold of an occasion of returning certainly into Spain. So that you must allow that proverb to be true, which fays, " It is an ill wind that blows no body good."

"Son, (said Lucinda to me) since you design to repass one day into your own country, and there abjure the religion of Mahomet, I am comforted. Thank heaven! (continued she) that I shall be able to carry back your fister Beatrice, safe and sound, into Castile."
"Yes, Madam, (cried I) you shall have it in your power: we will go all three together, as soon as possible, and rejoin the rest of our family; for I suppose you have more marks of your fruitfulness in Spain."---" No, (said my mother) I have no other children than you two; and you must know that Beatrice is the fruit of lawful wedlock."—" Why (I resumed) did you give my little sister that advantage over me? How could you resolve to marry? I have heard you say an hundred times, during my childhood, that you could not forgive an handsome woman for taking a husband."—" Every season has its reason, my son, (she replied) men of the most firm resolution are apt to change; and would you have a woman be more constant? I will (added she) recount my history after you lest Madrid." Then she made the sollowing narration, which (as it is curious) I will savour you with.

" If you remember it, (said my mother) you quitted young Leganez about twelve years ago: at that time the duke of Medina Celi told me that he would come and fup with me in private one evening: he appointed the day, when I waited for that nobleman, who came accordingly, and I had the good fortune to please him. He demanded the facrifice of all the rivals he might have: I granted his request, in hopes of being well paid for my condescension; and my hopes were not disappointed: for, the very next day, I received from him confrderable presents, which were followed by many more, during the course of our correspondence. I was afraid that I should not be able to detain a man of such high rank a long time in my fetters; and this I dreaded the more, because I knew very well, that he had escaped from celebrated beauties, whose chains he had broke almost as soon as he had bore them. Nevertheless, far from being every day less and less pleased with my favours, his raptures feemed rather to increase: in short, I had the art to amule him, and hinder his heart, naturally inconstant, from giving way to its usual levity.

He had been attached to me already three months, and I had room to flatter myself, that his passion would be of long duration; when one of my she-friends and I went to an assembly, where he happened to be with his duches, in order to hear a concert of vocal and in-frumental music. We chanced to place ourselves pretty near the duches, who was pleased to take it amis, that I should presume to appear in a place where she was, and fent a message to me, by one of her women, desiring that I would immediately withdraw. I returned an infolent answer, which incensed the duchess so much, that she complained of it to her husband, who came to me in person, and said, "Retire, Lucinda; though noblemen of my rank attach themselves to such little creatures as you, they must not forget themselves altogether: if we love you more than our wives, we honour our wives more than you; and as often as you have the insolence to put yourselves in competition with them, you will always have the mortification to be treated with indignity.

Luckily for me the duke spoke this in a tone of voice fo low, that not one word was overheard by the people around us. I withdrew, covered with shame, and wept with vexation, for the affront I had received. To crown my confusion, the actors and actresses got notice of the adventure that very evening : one would think thefe people entertain a dæmon, who delights in reporting to one whatever happens to another. If an actor, for example, is guilty of some extravagant action in a debauch. or an actress enters into articles with a rich gallant, the company is immediately informed of the circumstance. All my comrades, therefore, knew what happened at the concert, and God knows how they rejoiced at my expence. A spirit of charity, which reigns among them, usually manifests itself on these occasions. I put myself. however, above their tittle-tattle, and consoled myself for the loss of the duke de Medina Celi; for he visited me no more, and I learned a few days after, that a Carthusian nun had made a conquest of him.

When a lady belonging to the theatre has the good fortune to be in vogue, she cannot want lovers; and the passion of a grandee, though it does not last above three days, greatly inhances her price. I found myself besieged with adorers, as soon as it was known in Madrid that the duke had for saken me. Those rivals whom I had sacrificed to him, more captivated by my charms than ever, returned in crowds, as candidates for my favour; I received homage from a thousand other hearts, and was never fo much in fashion before. Of all the men who courted my graces, a fat German, gentleman to the Duke d'Ossuna, seemed the most eager. He had not a very amiable person, but attracted my attention by a thousand pistoles, which he had amassed in the fervice of his master, and which he squandered away in order to be deemed worthy of being in the lift of my As long as this worthy admirer, whose happy gallants. name was Brutandorf, had money to fpend, I gave him a favourable reception: but when he was ruined, he found my door always shut against him. This proceeding of mine displeased him, and he came to search for me at the theatre, during the play. He found me behind the scenes, and began to reproach me for my ingratitude. I laughed in his face, at which he was enraged, and lent me a box on the ear, like a blunt German as he was: I shrieked aloud, interrupted the reprefentation, appeared upon the stage, and addressing myfelf to the Duke d'Ossuna, who was present with the duchels his lady, demanded justice for the German behaviour of his gentleman. The duke ordered us to go on with the play, and faid he would hear the parties, when we had finished the piece. As foon as it was over, I presented myself, in a good deal of emotion, before the duke, and fignified my grievance in a pathetic manner; as for the German, he employed but two words in his defence; he faid, " that far from repenting of what he had done, he would do it again, on the fame provocation." Both parties being heard, the duke of Offuna faid to my adversary," Brutandors, I dismis you from my fervice ; let me never fee your face again : not that I mind your having struck an actress, but am offended at your want of respect to your master and mistress, by prefuming to disturb the entertainment in their presen e."

This sentence I could not diget; I was mortally piqued, because the German had not been turned away on account of his insolence to me: I imagined that such an affront put upon an actress, ought to have been as severely punished as petty treason, and I had laid my account with seeing the gentleman undergo some terrible infliction.

infliction. This disagreeable event undeceived and convinced me, that the world always makes a diffinction between the players and the characters they represent. I was, for this reason, disgusted with the stage, which I resolved to abandon, and go to live at a great distance from Madrid. I accordingly chose the city of Valencia for the place of my retreat, and thither I repaired incognito, with the value of twenty thousand ducats, in jewels and cash: a fortune, as I thought, sufficient to maintain me during the rest of my days; fince I defigned to lead a very retired life. I took a small house at Valencia, and had no other domestics than a maid-fervant and a page, to whom I was as little known as to the whole city. I pretended to be a widow of an officer of the king's boushold; and said I came to settle at Valencia, because it had the reputation of being one of the most agreeable places in Spain. I saw but very little company, and observed such a regular conduct, that I was never suspected of having been an actress. In spite of my care, however, to keep myielf concealed, I attracted the notice of a gentleman, who had a countryhouse near Paterna. He was a very well made cavalier between thirty five and forty years of age, but withal a nobleman very much in debt; which is no great rarity in the kingdom of Valencia, more than in other countries.

This Signior Hidalgo * finding my person to his liking, wanted to know if I could answer his purpose in other respects: for this end, he uncoupled his spies to make discoveries, and had the pleasure to learn from their report, that, besides some share of beauty, I was a widow of good fortune. He looked upon me, therefore, as a suitable match, and, in a little time, an honest old gentlewoman came to my house, and told me, from him, that being equally charmed with my beauty and virtue, he made a tendre of his heart, and was ready to conduct me to the altar, as soon as I would savour him with my hand. I asked three days to deliberate upon his proposal, and inform myself of his character; which was so engaging, that, although I was not ignorant of his situation, I easily determined to marry him in a short time after.

^{*} Hidalgo, (in Spanish) is a gentleman literally somebody's son, in contradistinction to those who are the sons of nobody.

Don Manuel de Xercia (so was my husband called) carried me immediately to his castle, that had a very antique air, of which he was not a little vain. He pretended that one of his ancestors had caused it to be built: and from thence concluded, that there was not a more antient house in Spain than that of Xercia. But this title of nobility, fair as it was, had like to have been destroyed by time; for the castle, which they were obliged to prop up in several parts, threatened immediate ruin. How happy, therefore, was Don Manuel in marrying me! more than half of my money was employed in reparations; and the rest served to put us in a condition of making a figure in the country. Behold me then (to use the expression) in a new world, changed into the nymph of a castle, and lady of a parish. Here was a metamorphosis! and I was too good an actress, not to fupport, with dignity, the splendor with which I was invested by my rank. I assumed lofty theatrical airs, which made the village conceive an high idea of my birth. How merry would they have been at my expence, had they known the truth of the matter! the nobility in the neighbourhood would have bestowed upon me a thousand taunts, and the peasants abated a great deal of the respect they shewed.

I had lived happily near fix years with Don Manuel, when he died, leaving my affairs in great perplexity, with your fifter Beatrice, then going in her fifth year. The castle, which was all the estate we had, was unluckily engaged to several creditors, the chief of whom was one Bernard Astuto *, whose name seemed very well adapted to his character: he practifed at Valencia the business of an attorney, which he exercised with consummate skill, having studied the law in order to qualify himself for cheating with the greater dexterity. What a terrible creditor he was! a castle under the claws of such an attorney, is like a pigeon in the talons of a kite. Accordingly, Signior Astuto, as soon as he understood the death of my husband, did not fail to besiege the castle, which he would undoubtedly have blown up, by the mines that chicanery began to prepare; had not my good genius interpoted, and ordered it fo, as that my besieger became my slave. I had the good fortune to captivate him, during an interview we had on the fubject of the law-fuit. I spared nothing, I own, to infpire him with a passion for me : the desire of faving my land, made me practife upon him all those languishing airs which had often succeeded so well. Notwithstanding all my art, I was afraid of being baffled by the attorney, who was so ingulphed in business, that he did not feem susceptible of an amorous impression. Neverthelefs, this fullen, aukward scrawler, took more pleafure in looking at me, than I imagined. " Madam, (faid he) I know not how to make love: I have always applied to my protession so closely, as to neglect the methods and customs of gallantry; but, however, I am not ignorant of the effential part; and, therefore, to come to the point, I affure you, that if you will give me your hand, we will burn the whole proceedings; I will bubble the other creditors, who join in the fuit against you: you shall enjoy the life-rent, and your daughter the property of the land." My own interest. and that of Beatrice, did not permit me to hefitate; I accepted the proposal, and the attorney kept his promife. He turned his arms against the rest of the creditors, and fecured me in the possession of my castle; and this, perhaps, was the first time of his having befriended the widow and the orphan.

^{*} Astuto, is a Spanish word, figuifying crast or cunning.

I became, therefore, an attorney's wife, without ceasing to be lady of the parish. But this new marriage cost me the esteem of the gentry in Valencia. The women of fashion looked upon me as one who had degenerated, and therefore would not visit me; so that I was obliged to confine myself to an acquaintance among citizens: a circumstance that gave me some uneasiness at first; because I had been, for six years, accustomed to correspond with none but ladies of distinction; but I soon consoled myself, and became acquainted with the wives of a scrivenor and two attornies, whose charac-

e de de

n

b

ters were pleasant enough; there was something ridiculous in their behaviour, that diverted me very much.
These small gentry believed themselves ladies of some consideration. "Alas! said I, (sometimes, to myself, when I saw them forget themselves) this is the way of the world: every one thinks herself better than her neighbour. I imagined, that actresses were the only people who did not know themselves; but I find that citizens wives, are not a whit more reasonable. I wish that by way of punishment, they were obliged to keep in their houses the pictures of their grandsathers; in good faith they would not place them in the most remarkable apartment."

After having been married four years, Signior Bernard Afluto fell fick, and died without children; fo that, with what he had fettled upon me at our marriage, and the money I was left in possession of, I found myfelf a rich widow, and had the reputation of being fo. On this report, a Sicilian gentleman, whose name was Colifichini, refolved to attach himself to me, in order to ruin or espouse me, for he left me the choice. He had come from Palermo, to see Spain, and after having fatisfied his curiofity, waited (as he faid) at Valencia, for an opportunity of repassing into Sicily. This gentleman was not more than five and twenty years of age, genteely shaped, though finall; in short, I liked his appearance. He found means to speak with me in private, and I will frankly own, that I became madly fond of him, in our first interview. On his side, the little rogue feemed quite captivated by my charms; and I believe (God forgive me) we should have married one another immediately, had the attorney's death, which was still recent, permitted me to contract a new engagement fo foon: but ever fince I had fallen into the tatte of matrimony, I maintained the punctilio's of decorum.

We agreed, therefore, to defer our marriage for some time, out of decency: in the mean time, Colifichini continued his addresses, and his passion, far from abating, seemed to increase daily. The poor young man who was not very well provided with cash; I perceived it, and he no longer wanted money: for, besides that I was almost twice his age, I remembered that I had laid

the

the men under contribution, in my youth; and I looked upon what I now did, as a restitution that acquitted my conscience. We waited as patiently as we could, for the expiration of the time prescribed by custom, for women to remain in a state of widowhood: and then, went to the altar, where we mutually bound ourselves in the indissoluble ties of wedlock: we afterwards retired to my castle, where I may say, we lived two years, not so much like husband and wise, as like two tender lovers. But, alas! we were not destined to be long happy in one another, a statal pleurisy robbed me of my dear Colifichini."

Here I interrupted my mother, crying, " How! Madam, your third husband dead too! you must certainly be a very dangerous tenement." " What could I do fon? (answered Lucinda) was it in my power to prolong the days that heaven had numbered? if I have loft three husbands, I could not help it. Two of them I regretted very much: he for whom I had the least regard was the attorney; as I married him out of interest, I easily confoled myself for his death. But (added she) to return to Colifichini, I must tell you, that a few months after his decease, having a mind to go and see, with my own eyes, a country-house near Palermo, which he had alligned to me as a jointure, in our contract of marriage, I embarked, with my daughter, for Sicily; but we were taken in our passage, by the vessels of the Dey of Algiers, and conducted into this city. Happily for us you chanced to be on the spot, where we were put up to fale, otherwise we might have fallen into the hands of some barbarous master, who would have maltreated us, and under whom we might have passed our whole life in bondage, without your knowing any thing of the matter."

)-

of 31

9

er

ill

fo

ri-

ne

ini

at-

an

ed

t I

aid the Such was my mother's narration; after which, gentlemen, I gave her the best apartment of my house, with the liberty of living as she should think proper; a permission that she relished very much. She had contracted such a habit of being in love, from the repeated attacks of that passion, that she must absolutely have either an husband or a gallant. At first she cast her eyes on some of my slaves; but Haly Pegelin, a Greek renegado, who came frequently to the house, soon engrossed her attention. She conceived a more violent passion for him, than ever she felt for Colifichini, and she was so much mistress of the art of pleasing, that she found the secret of charming him also. I winked at their intelligence, and thought of nothing then but my return into spain. The Dey having already permitted me to sit out a vessel, to cruize and commit piracy, I was busied in making preparations; and eight days before they were finished, said to Lucinda, "Madam, we shall depart from Algiers, in a very little time, and lose sight of that place which you deteft fo much."

My mother grew pale at these words, and remained speechless. At which being strangely surprized; " What do I see, Madam! (iaid I) what is the meaning of that consternation in your looks? you feem to be afflicted, rather than rejoiced at what I tell you! I thought I should have made you happy with the news of every thing being ready for our departure. Have you no longer any defire then, of repassing into Spain?" " None at all fon, (answered my mother) I have had so much affliction in that kingdom, that I renounce it for ever." "What do I hear! (cried I, in a transport of grief) ah! say rather that love detaches you from it. O heavens! what a change is here! when you arrived in this city, every object that prefented itself was odious to your eyes: but Haly Pegelin has altered your disposition." "I don't deny it (replied Lucinda) I love that renegade, whom I defign to take for my fourth husband." " What an abandoned project! (faid I, interrupting her, with horror) would you marry a muffulman? you forget that you are a christian; or rather you never was one but in name. Ah! mo her, what are you about to do? you have resolved upon your own perdition, by voluntarily embracing that which I was compelled to by necessity."

I used many more arguments to dissuade her from her design; but I harangued to no purpose: she had formed her resolution; and not contented with following her own wicked inclination, and quitting me to live with that renegade, she wanted to carry Beatrice along with her also: but this I opposed. "Ah, wretched Lucinda! (said I to her) if nothing is able to restrain you, at least abandon yourself only, to the fury that possesses your imagination; don't drag a young innocent creature to the precipice from whence you intend to throw yourfelf." Lucinda went away, without making any reply, and I believed, that a remaining ray of reason enlightened and hindered her from being obstinate in demanding her daughter. But how little was I acquainted with my mother! two days after, one of my flaves faid to me, " Signior, take care of yourfelf; one of l'egelin's captives has imparted a thing to me, of which you cannot take the advantage too foon. Your mother has changed her religion, and to punish you, for having refused to let her carry off Beatrice, is resolved to inform the Dey of your intended flight." I did not doubt one moment, that Lucinda was capable of doing what my flave mentioned: I had opportunities of studying the lady, and perceived, that, by the habit of acting fanguinary parts in tragedies, she was so familiarized to guilt that she could have caused me to be burnt alive, and, I believe, would have been no more affected with my death, than with the catastrophe of a dramatic performance.

0

e

"

is 11

e, at

h

at

in

Du

ily

"

rer

ed

ner

ith

ith

_11-

ou,

21

Willing therefore not to neglect the advice of my flave, I haftened my embarkation, hired Turks, according to the custom of the corfairs of Algiers, when they go on a cruize; but hired no more than fuch as were necessary to keep me unsuspected, and fet sail as foon as possible, with all my slaves, and my sister Beatrice. You may well believe, that I did not forget to carry off at the fame time, all my jewels and money, which might amount to the value of fix thousand ducats. When we got to sea, we began by securing the Turks whom we easily chained, because my slaves were more numerous than they: and we had fuch a favourable wind, that in a little time we made the coast of Italy, and arrived without the least bad accident, in the harbour of Leghorn, where, I believe, the whole city crowded to fee us come ashore. The father of my slave Azarini being among the spectators, by accident or curiofity, furveyed all the captives with great attention, as they disembarked; but though he fought among them the features of his son, he little expected to see him again.

11

al

fi

t

b

e

again. What transports and embraces were the consequence of their meeting, when they recollected one another!

As foon as Azarini had told his father who I was, and what brought me to Leghorn, the old man obliged me as well as Beatrice to lodge at his house. I shall pass over in silence the detail of a thousand things that I was obliged to perform, in being re-admitted into the bosom of the church; and only observe, that I abjured Mahometanism much more heartily than I had embraced it. After having entirely purged myself of the gall of Algiers, I fold my vessel, and fet all my slaves at liberty; as for the Turks, thay were detained in prison at Leghorn, in order to be exchanged for christians. I received the best of treatment from both the Azarini's, the younger of whom married my fifter Beatrice, who was indeed no bad match for him, being a gentleman's daughter, and heiress of the castle of Xercia, which my mother had taken care to farm out to a rich peasant of Paterna, when the resolved upon her passage into Sicily.

Haying stayed some time at Leghorn, I set out for Florence, which I longed much to fee; and whither I did not go without letters of recommendation. Azarini the father had friends at the grand duke's court, to whom he introduced me as a Spanish gentleman his ally; and I prefixed Don to my name, imitating in that a great many Spanish plebeians, who when they are out of their own country, assume that title of honour without ceremony. I boldly, therefore called myfelf Don Raphael; and as I had brought from Algiers a sufficiency to support my dignity appeared at court in a splendid manner. The gentleman to whom Azarini had wrote in my fayour, gave out that I was a person of quality; so that his tellimony, together with the airs I affumed, made me eafily pass for a man of importance. I soon got acquainted with the principal noblemen, who prefented me to the grand duke, whom I had the good fortune to pleafe: upon which, I bent my whole endeavour to make my court to that prince, and fludy his disposition. I listened attentively to what the oldest courtiers said to him; and by their discourse discovered his inclinations. Among other things I observed that he loved raillery, good stories, ries. and fallies of wit. I modelled myself accordingly; and every morning marked in my pocket book the stories I designed for the day. I had such a number of them in my memory, that my budget might be said to have been sull; and yet, in spite of all my management, it was emptied apace, in such a manner, that I should either have been obliged to use repetition, or shew that I was at the end of my apothegms; if my genius, fruitful in siction, had not surnished me with abundance. But I composed tales of gallantry and humour, that were very entertaining to the great duke; and as it often happens with professed wits, in the morning I invented bright expressions, which I uttered as unpremeditated sallies in the afternoon.

I even elevated myfelf into a poet, and confecrated my muse to the praise of the prince. I freely own indeed, that my verse was none of the best, therefore not much criticited; but had it been better, I question if it would have been better received by the grand duke, who feemed very well fatisfied with my talents; the matter, perhaps, hindered him from finding fault. Be that as it will, this prince infenfibly took tuch a liking to me, as gave umbrage to the courtiers. They endeavoured to discover who I was, but did not succeed. Getting notice, however, that I was a renegade, they did not fail to inform the prince of it, in hopes of injuring my cha-But this they could not accompliff; on the contrary, the great duke, one day, obliged me to give him a faithful narration of my voyage to Algiers; I obeved, and my adventures, which I did not at all disguite, afforded him infinite pleasure.

1

I

r

.

;

.

t

-

e

y

d

d

"Don Raphael, (said he, when I had finished the relation) I have a regard for you, and will give you a mark of it, which will not permit you to doubt of my riendship. I will make you the depository of my secrets; and to begin with an instance of my confidence, I must tell you that I am in love with the wife of one of my ministers. She is the most amiable lady of my court, but at the same time, the most virtuous: shut up amidst her family, and solely attached to a husband whom she adores, she seems ignorant of the noise her charms make in Florence. Judge you if this must not be a dissipation of the conquest. Nevertheless, this beauty, inaccessible as she is to lovers, has deigned, sometimes, to hear my sighs: I have sound means to speak to her in private, and acquaint her with the sentiments of my heart; but I don't flatter myself with the hope of having inspired her with mutual love: she has never given me cause to form such an agreeable idea: I don't, however, despair of pleasing her, by my assiduity, and the mysterious conduct I shall take care to observe.

My passion for that lady (added he) is known to nobody but herself: for, instead of consuling my inclination without constraint, and acting the fovereign. I conceal the knowledge of my flame from all the world. A piece of delicacy which I think I owe to Mascarini, the hulband of her I love: his zeal, attachment, fervices and probity oblige me to conduct myfelt with great fecrecy and circumspection. I would not plunge a dagger into the bosom of that unbappy husband, by declaring myself the lover of his wife; but wish that he may always remain ignorant, if poslible, of the slame that consumes me : for, I am persuaded that he would die for grief, if he knew the confidence I now repose in you. I conceal my steps, therefore, and am resolved to make use of you, in expressing to Lucretia all the pangs I fuffer, by the constraint which she imposes upon me: you shall be the interpreter of my fentiments, and I don't at all doubt that you will acquit yourfelf of the commission to a miracle. Contract an acquaintance with Mascarini, endeavour to gain his friendship, infinuate yourfelf into his house, and procure the liberty of converling with his wife. This is what I expect of you, and what I affure myfelf, you will perform with all the discretion and address that such a delicate employment requires."

I promised to do all that lay in my power, to justify the considence he honoured me with, and contribute to the success of his slame: and soon kept my word with him; I spared nothing to please Mascarini, and accomplished my end with ease. Charmed to find his friendship courted by a man who was beloved of his prince, he met my advances half way: his house was open to me; I had free access to his lady, and I dare say, behaved myself so well, that he had not the least suspicion

ot

I

k

C

11

h

Ì

P

d

W

of the negociation entrusted to my care. 'Tis true indeed, for an Italian, he was not much addicted to jealoufy; he depended upon the virtue of Lucretia, and flutting himself up in his closet, left me frequently alone with her. I went roundly to work, the very first opportunity; entertained the lady with the passion of the grand dake, and told her, that my fole defign in coming to her house, was to talk to her of the prince. She did not feem captivated by him; and yet, I perceived that her vanity hindered her from rejecting his addreffes. She did not want understanding; but she was a woman, and I observed that her virtue yielded insenfibly to the superb idea of a sovereign in her chains. short, the prince had reason to flatter himself that without imploying the violence of a Tarquin, he would fee Lucretia subjected to his love. An accident, however, which he little expected, destroyed his hope, as you shall presently hear.

1

n

d

e

h

1-

1, ie

nt

fy

to

th

111-id-

ce,

to av-

ion of

I am naturally impudent among women, having acquired that qualification, I know not whether it be good or bad, among the Turks: Lucretia was handsome, and I, forgetting that I was only to act the part of an ambaffador, talked to her on my own score, offering my fervices with all the gallantry I was mafter of. Instead of being shocked at my audaciousness, and replying in a rage, she said, with a smile, "You must own, Don Raphael, that the grand duke has made choice of a very faithful and zealous minister, who serves him with an integrity never enough to be commended." " Madam. (faid I, with the same air) don't let us examine things scrupulously; but lay aside those resections, which (I know very well) are not at all favourable to me. I abandon myself to my passion; and after all, don't believe myself the first confident of a prince, who has betrayed his master in affairs of gallantry; for the great have often dangerous rivals in their messengers of pleasure." " That may be, (replied Lucretia) but as for my part, I am to high-spirited, that nobody under the degree of a prince, shall ever make an impression on my heart. Conduct yourself accordingly. (added she, growing serious) and let us change the discourse. I am willing to torget what you have faid, on condition that you shall never VOL. II. R talk to me in the same manner; otherwise you may chance to repent it."

Although this was an advice to the reader, of which I ought to have taken the advantage, I did not leave off entertaining Mascarini's wife with my passion: I even pressed her with more ardour than ever, to make suitable returns to my tenderness, and was rash enough to take liberties. Upon which the lady, being affronted at my discourse and mustulman behaviour, checked me abruptly, threatened to make the grand duke acquainted with my insolence, and affured me, that she would defire him to punish me, as I deferred. I was piqued, in my turn, at these menaces; my love changed into hate; and determined to be revenged upon Lucretia, for her contempt, I went in quest of her husband, whom, after he had fworn that he would not expose me. I informed of the correspondence between his wife and the prince, not forgetting to paint her very amorous, in order to make the scene more interesting. The minister, to prevent all accidents, thut up his tpoufe, without any other form of process, in a secret apartment, where she was guarded by people on whom he could rely. While she was thus furrounded by spies, who hindered her from informing the grand duke of her fituation, I told that prince, with a melancholy air, that he must no more think of Lucretia; that Mascarini had, doubtless, discovered the whole affair, fince he had taken it into his head, to watch his wife; that I could not imagine what had alarmed his suspicion of me, for I thought, I had always behaved with a good deal of address; that the lady, perhaps, had confessed the whole to her husband, in concert with whom, she had allowed herself to be locked up, in order to avoid those importunities which alarmed her virtue. The prince seemed very much afflicted at my report; I was touched with his grief, and repented more than once of what I had done; but it was too late: Lefides, I confess that I felt a malicious joy, when I represented to myself the condition to which I had reduced the proud won an who had difdained my paffion.

I enjoyed, with impunity, the pleasure of revenge, which is so sweet to all the world, and in particular to Spaniards, when the grand duke being one day in company with five or fix of his courtiers and me, said, "In what manner do you think a man ought to be punished, who has dared to abuse the confidence of his prince, and attempted to deprive him of his mistres?" "He ought (said one) to be tied to the tails of sour horses, and torn to pieces." Another was of opinion, that he should be mawled to death. The least cruel of those Italians, and he whose sentence was most favourable to the delinquent, said, "That he would be satisfied with causing him to be thrown from the top of a high tower." "And what is the opinion of Don Raphael? (resumed the grand duke) I am persuaded that the Spaniards are as severe as the Italians in fuch conjunctures."

I easily comprehended, as you may believe, that Mascarini had not kept his oath; or that his wife had found means to apprize the prince of what had passed between her and me; and my confusion appeared plain on my countenance. Nevertheless, disconcerted as I was, I answered with a resolute tone, " Sir, the Spaniards are more generous; they would pardon the confident, on fuch an occasion, and, by their goodness, raise in his foul an eternal regret for having betrayed them." " Well, (faid the prince) I find myself capable of such generosity. I pardon the traitor: for I have none but myself to blame for having bestowed my confidence upon a man whom I did not know, and whom I had reason to diftruft, after what I had heard of his character. Don Raphael, (added he) this is the manner in which I will avenge myfelf: quit my dominions immediately, and let me never fee your face again." I withdrew on the instant, not so much afflicted at my disgrace, as rejoiced at coming off fo cheaply; and the very next day, embarked in a veffel that failed from Leghorn, on its return to Barcelona,

I interrupted Don Raphael in this part of his history, by faying, "For a man of understanding, methinks you committed a great blunder in neglecting to leave Florence, immediately after the discovery you made to Mascarini, of the prince's passion for Lucretia; you should have concluded, that the grand duke would soon come to the knowledge of your infidelity." "I grant it, (replied the son of Lucinda) and notwithstanding the affurance furance which the minister gave me, of not exposing me to the resentment of the prince, I proposed to disappear in a very short time.

I arrived at Barcelona, (continued he) with the remainder of the wealth I had brought from Algiers, the best part of which I had dissipated at Florence, in the character of the Spanish gentleman. I did not stay long in Catalonia: for having a longing defire to revisit Madrid, the charming place of my nativity, I fatisfied, as foon as possible, the defire that impelled me. When I arrived in that city, I took furnished lodgings, by accident, at a house where a lady lived, whose name was Camilla, and who, though no minor, was a very engaging creature. I take Signior Gil Blas to witness, who faw her, much about that time, at Valladolid. She had still more wit than beauty, and never had a she adventurer better talents for decoying dupes: but she was none of those coquets, who lay up the acknowledgments of their gallants: when the had pillaged a man of bufiness! she shared his spoils with the first sharper she found to her liking.

We loved one another at first fight; and the conformity of our manners joined us to closely, that we foon had every thing in common. Our fortunes, indeed, were not very confiderable, and therefore we fpent them in a very little time. Neither of us, unluckily, minded any thing but our pleafure, or made the least use of the talents we had, to live at our neighbour's expence. But misery, at last, awakened our geniuses, which pleasure had benumbed: and Camilla faid to me. " My dear Raphael, let us make a diversion, my friend, and renounce a fidelity that ruins us both : you may captivate a rich widow, and I may charm fome nobleman: for if we continue faithful to one another, here will be two fortunes loft." " Fair Camil'a, (I replied) you have anticipated me; I was going to make the same proposal to you. I affent to your scheme, my queen : yes, for the better support of our mutual flame, let us attempt advantageous conquests: the infidelities we shall commit will turn to triumphs in the end."

This

This convention being made, we took the field, and made confiderable motions at first, without being able to encounter what we fought. Camilla could light upon none but beaus; that is to fay, gallants who had not a penny in their pockets: and I could meet with no women, but such as loved better to levy contributions than pay them. As our arts were useless in love, we had recourse to stratagems, and performed so many, that our fame reached the ears of the corregidor; and that fevere judge for the devil, ordered one of his alguazils to apprehend us; but this officer being as good-natured as the other was cruel, gave us time to quit Madrid, in consideration of a small sum which we bestowed upon him. We took the road to Valladolid, and fixed in that city, having hired a house, in which I lived with Camilla, who passed for my sister, to avoid scandal. At first, we kept our industry under the rein, and began to fludy the ground, before we should form any enterprize.

One day, a man accosting me in the street, saluted me very civilly, saying, "Signior Don Raphael, do you know me?" I answered, "No." Upon which he resumed: "But I recollect you: I have seen you at the court of Tuscany, where I then belonged to the grand duke's guards. I quitted the service of that prince some months ago, and am come to Spain with an Italian of great finesse: we have been three weeks at Valladolid, and lodge with a Cassilian and Gallician, who are, without contradiction, two young fellows of honour. We live together by the work of our hands, make good chear, and amuse ourselves like princes: if you will join us, you shall be agreeably received by my confederates: for you always seemed to me to be a gallant man, of a disposition not addicted to scruples, and a brosessed

The rogue's frankness excited mine. "Since you speak to me with so little reterve, (said I to him) it is but reasonable that I should explain myself, in the same manner to you. Indeed, I am not a novice in your profession; and if my modesty would allow me to recount my exploits, you would see that you have not judged too advantageously of my talents; but I will forbear to launch out in my own praise, and content myself with affuring you, while I accept that place in your company which is offered, that I will neglect nothing to approve myfelf worthy of your choice." As foon as I fignified to this ambidexter, my confent to augment the number of his comrades, he conducted me to the place where they were, and introduced me to their acquaintance. It was here that I faw, for the first time, the illustrious Those gentlemen examined me Ambrose de Lamela. touching my skill in the mystery of appropriating to one's felf, with address, the effects of another. wanted to know if I understood the principles of their art; but I shewed them a great many stratagems, which they did not know, and which acquired their admiration of my ability. They were still more astonished, when, despising the dexterity of my hand, as a thing too common, I told them that I excelled in tricks, which required the assistance of genius. To convince them of this, I recounted the adventure of Jerome de Moyadas; and, upon the simple narration of that affair, they found me such a superior genius, that I was chosen their chief, by unanimous confent. I foon justified their choice, by an infinite number of knavish designs, which we put in practice, and of which I was, as it were, the informing When we had occasion for an actress to carry on our projects, we made use of Camilla, who performed all her parts to admiration.

R 3

launch

About that time, our brother Ambrose, being tempted to revisit his native country, set out for Galicia, assuring us, that we might depend upon his return. He satisfied his desire, and on his way back again, going to Burgos, with an intention of striking some stroke, an innkeeper of his acquaintance introduced him to the service of Signior Gil Blas, of Santillane, with whose affairs he did not sail to make him acquainted. Signior Gil Blas, (he added, addressing himself to me) you know how we rid you of your portmanteau, in our surnished lodgings at Valladolid; and I don't doubt that you suspected Ambrose of being the chief instrument of that thest. And you was in the right: for, at your arrival, he came and laid your situation before us, and we, the gentlemen undertakers, regulated ourselves accordingly.

But you are ignorant of the consequences of that adventure, which I will, therefore, let you know. Ambrose and I carried off your portmanteau, and mounting your mules took the road to Madrid, without incumbring ourselves with Camilla, or the rest of our comrades, who, without doubt, were as much surprized as you, at our non-appearance next day.

On the second day, we changed our defign, and in-Read of going to Madrid, which I had not quitted without cause, we passed by Zeberos, and continued our rout as far as Toledo. In this city, our first care was to dress ourselves like gentlemen; then giving ourselves out for two brothers of Galicia, who travelled out of curiofity, we foon became acquainted with persons of character. As I had been so much accustomed to act the man of quality, I was eafily mistaken for such, and people being usually dazzled by expence, we imposed upon every body, by the gallant treats we began to give the la-Among the women whom I vifited, there was one who touched my heart: I found her fairer than Camilla, and a good deal more young: I was defirous of knowing who she was, and learned that her name was Violante, and that her husband was a gentleman, who. cloyed already with her charms, purfued those of a courtezan, whom he loved. This piece of information, was enough to determine me to establish Violante the tovereign lady of my affection.

It was not long before she perceived her conquest: I began to follow her every where, and commit a thou-sand impertinencies, to persuade her that I wanted nothing more, than to console her for the infidelity of her spouse. The fair one made her reflections on the matter, which were such, that, at last, I had the pleasure of knowing her approbation of my sentiments. I received from her a billet, in answer to several which I had sent to her, by one of those o'd matrons, who are so ferviceable in Spain and Italy. The lady gave me to understand, that her husband supped every evening with his mistress, and did not come home before it was very late. The same night I went under the windows of Violante, and entered into a most tender conversation with her: after which, we agreed, at parting, to enjoy the same opportunity every night, at the same hour, without prejudice to the other acts of gallantry, which we should be permitted to exercise in the day.

R 4

Hitherto Don Balthazar, the husband of my princes, came off very cheaply; but I chose to love naturally, and repaired one evening under the lady's windows. with a defign to tell her, that I could live no longer, if I did not enjoy a tête a tête with her, in a place more fuitable to the excess of my love : an indulgence which I had not, as yet, been able to obtain. But just as I got to the place, I faw a man come into the fireet, who feemed to observe me : in effect, it was the husband, who returned from the courtezan earlier than usual, and who perceiving a cavalier near his house, instead of going in, walked to and fro in the fireet. I remained, for some time, unresolved, but, at last, determined to accost Don Balthazar, whom I did not know, and of whom I was also utterly unknown. " Signior cavalier, (faid I to him) pray lay the street free to me for one night: I will do as much for you another time," " Signior, (he replied) I was going to make the same request to you: I am in love with a girl, whom her brother guards like a dragon, and who lives not above twenty paces from hence; so that I wish there was no body in the street." " There is one way (faid I) of satisfying us both, without incommoding either : for (added I, shewing him his own house) the lady, whom I serve, lodges there; and let us assist one another, if either of us should be attacked." "With all my heart, (he replied) I will go to my rendezvous, and we will back one another, should there be occasion." So saying, he left me; but it was in order to observe me the better, and this the darkness of the night permitted him to do with impunity.

As for my part, I approached, in security, the balcony of Violante, who soon appeared, and we began to converse together. I did not sail to insist upon my queen's granting me a private interview in some particular place. She resisted my importunities a little, to inhance the value of the favour which I demanded;

then

then dropping a letter, which she took out of her pocket, " Hold, (said she) you will find, in this biliet, the promise of what you so earnestly desire. She afterwards withdrew, because the hour at which her husband usually returned, was at hand; upon which I fecured the billet, and advanced to the place where Don Balthazar faid he was concerned : but he having very well perceived what I wanted with his wife, came to me, faying, "Well, Signior cavalier, are you fatisfied with your good fortune?" " I have cause to be so, (I replied :) and what have you done? has love favoured your addresses?" " Ah no! (said he) the cursed brother of the beauty whom I love, is returned from a countryhouse, where I imagined he would stay till to-morrow; and this mischance has baulked me of the pleasure with which I flattered myself."

Don Balthazar and I made mutual protestations of friendship; and to tie the knots of it the faster, made an appointment to meet the next day, in the great fquare. After we parted, he went home, but mentioned not a word of what he knew to Violante. Next day he repaired to the great square, where I arrived a moment after him, we faluted one another with demonfirations of friendship, as perfidious on one side, as sincere on the other. Then Don Balthazar, made me the confident of a feigned intrigue with the lady whom he had mentioned the preceding night: recounting a long flory that he had invented, in order to engage me in my turn, to tell him in what manner I had become acquainted with Violante. I did not fail to fall into the fnare, and confess all with the utmost frankness: I even shewed the letter which I had received from her, and read the contents in these words.

d

Shall dine to-morrow with Donna Inez: you know where she lives: 'tis in the house of that faithful friend, that I intend to give you a private interview; for I can no longer resule that favour which you seem to deserve."

[&]quot;This (said Don Balthazar) is a billet which promifes you the accomplishment of your wish; I congratulate R 5 you beforehand, on the happiness that attends you." He could not help being a little disconcerted when he faid this; but he easily concealed his trouble and confusion from me. I was so much engrossed by my hope, that I never thought of observing my confident, who was obliged, however, to leave me, that I might not at last perceive his agitation. He ran to apprize his brother-in-law of this adventure : but I am ignorant of what passed between them; all I know of the matter, is, that Don Balthazar came and knocked at the door while I was with Violante, at the house of Donna Inez: and as foon as we learned that it was he, I escaped at a back door before he came in. As foon as I was gone, the ladies whom the unforeseen arrival of the husband had disconcerted, recollected themselves, and received him with such effronterie, that he suspected I was either concealed, or had made my escape. I cannot tell what he said to Donna Inez and his wife, because it never came to my knowledge.

Mean while, without suspecting that I was Don Balthazar's dupe, I went away, curfing him, and returned to the great square where I had appointed to meet Lamela. I did not find him however; he had little affairs of his own to manage; and the rogue was more fortunate than I. While I waited for him, I faw my perfidious confident arrive, who came up to me with a gay air, and fmiling, asked news of my interview with my nymph at the house of Donna Inez. "I don't know (said I) what dæmon, jealous of my pleasures, delights in thwarting them: but while I was alone with my lady, pressing her to make me happy, her husband, whom the devil confound ! came and knocked at the door : fo that being obliged to get off as fast as I could, I retired by a back-door, curfing to hell the troublefome cuckold who broke all my measures." " I am truly forry for it, (cried Don Balthazar, who felt a fecret joy at feeing my vexation) what an impertinent husband must be be! I advise you to give him no quarter." " O! as for that, (I replied) I will take your advice : and I can affure you that his honour shall make its exit this night : his wife, when I left her, bad me not be discouraged at fo small a matter : but be sure to come under her window, dow, earlier than usual, for she was resolved to admit me into her house: and desired me, at all events, to come attended with two or three friends, for fear of surprise." "What a prudent lady she is! (said he) I will, if you please, accompany you thither." "Ah, my dear friend! (cried I, in a transport of joy, while I threw my arms around his neck) I am infinitely obliged to you." "I will do more, (he returned) I am acquainted with a young fellow who is another Cæsar; he shall be of the party, and then you may boldly conside in your electre."

I did not know what acknowledgments to make to this new friend, so much was I charmed with his zeal. In short, I accepted the succour which he offered, and appointing to meet in the twilight under Violante's balcony, we parted for that time. He went to find his brother-in-law, who was the Cafar in question; and I took a turn till the evening, with Lamela, who, (though he was surprised at the ardour with which Don Balthazar espoused my interett) distrusted him no more than I: we fell nodding into the faare, which, I own, was unpardonable in people of our experience. thought it was time to present myself before Violante's window, Ambrose and I appeared upon the spot, armed with good rapiers; and there we found the lady's hufband, with another man waiting for us, without flinching. Don Balthazar according me, and shewing his brother-in law, faid, " Signior, this is the cavalier whose bravery I extolled fo much. Get into the house of your midrefs, and let not any anxiety hinder you from enjoying the most perfect felicity."

After some mutual compliments, I knocked at my nymph's door, which being opened by a kind of duenna; I entered, and without taking notice of what passed behind me, advanced into a hall where Violante was. While I saluted the lady, the two traitors who had sollowed me into the house, and shut the door so hastily after them, that Ambrose was lest in the street, discovered themselves. You may easily imagine that we then came to blows. Both of them charged me at once; but I found them work enough, and employed them in such a manner, that perhaps they repented they had

1-V, not chose a surer conveyance for their revenge. I ran the husband through the body, and his brother in-law seeing him out of the question, got to the door, which the duenna and Violante had opened to make their escape, while we were engaged. I pursued him into the street, where I rejoined Lamela, who not being able to extract one word from the women in their slight, did not precisely know what to think of the noise he had heard. We returned to the tavern where we lodged, secured our most valuable effects, and mounting our mules, rode out of the city, without waiting for day.

Knowing very well that this affair might have bad consequences, and that a search would be made at Toledo, which we were in the right to anticipate, we went to bed at Villarubia, at an inn, where, some time after, a merchant of Toledo arrived, in his way to Segorba. As we supped in his company, he recounted the tragical adventure of Violante's husband, and was so far from suspecting us to be concerned, that we boldly asked of him all manner of questions about the affair. Gentlemen, (said he) just as I set out this morning, I heard of the melancholy accident. Search was made every where for Violante, and I was told that the corregior, who is related to Don Ealthazar, has resolved to spare nothing in discovering the murderers. This is all I know of the matter."

Though I was not much alarmed at the fearch of the corregidor, I resolved to quit New Castile immediately; reslecting that when Violante should be found, she would confess all, and on her description of my person to the judge, people would be tent in pursuit of me. For this reason, the very next day, we avoided the high-way, through precaution: Lamela being luckily acquainted with three fourths of Spain, and particularly with the by-ways through which we could securely repair into Arragon. Instead of going straight to Cuença, we kept among the mountains adjacent to that city; and through paths that were not unknown to my guide, arrived at a a grotto which looked very much like an hermitage; and indeed, it was the same to which you came tast night for an asylum.

While

While I was confidering the country around which presented to my view a most charming rural prospect; my companion said to me, "I passed by this place six years ago, at which time, that grotto served as a retreat to an old hermit who gave me a very charitable reception; entertaining me with a share of his provisions: I remember that he was a very holy man, and harrangued me with a discourse that had almost detached me from the world: perhaps he is still alive: I will go and see." So saying, the curious Ambrose alighted from his mule, and entered the hermitage, where having staid some minutes, he returned, calling to me, "Come hither Don Raphael—come and see a very affecting scene."

I alighted immediately, and tying our mules to a tree. followed Lamela into the grotto, where I perceived an old anchorite, pale and dying, ftretched at his full length upon a truckle-bed. A white beard very buthy, covered his whole breaft; and in his hands claiped together, appeared a large, twifted rosary. At the noise we made in approaching him, he opened his eyes which death had already began to close, and after having looked at us for a moment, faid, "Whofoever you are, my brethren, profit by the spectacle that now presents itself to your eyes: I have lived forty years in the world, and fixty in this Ah! how long, at this moment, feems the time which I have bestowed on my pleasures: and on the contrary, how fhort does that appear which I have confecrated to penitence and devotion. Alas! I am afraid that the autherities of brother John, have not fufficiently expiated the fins of the licentiate Don Juan de Solis."

He had no sooner spoke these words than he expired, beaving us very much affected with his death. These sorts of objects always make some impression even on the greatest libertines. But we did not retain it long: we soon forgot what he had said to us, and began to take an inventory of every thing in the hermitage: an employment not very laborious; all his surniture consisting in what you may have observed in the grotto. Brother John was not only ill provided with surniture, but also kept a very bad larder: for, all the provision we found, was a few filberts and some crusts of barley-bread, so hard as to be, in all appearance, proof against the gums of the holy man. I say, his gums; because we observed that he had lost all his seeth. All that this solitary habitation contained, and all that we beheld, made us regard the good anchorite as a perfect saint. We were shocked, indeed, at one thing: we opened a paper in form of a letter, which he had laid upon the table, and in which, he begged that the person who should read it, would carry his rosary and sandals to the bishop of Cuença. We did not know with what intention, this new father of the desart, could desire to make such a present to his bishop. This seemed an outrage against humility, and the behaviour of a man who wanted to set up for canonization. And perhaps there was nothing in it, but pure simplicity: for I don't pretend to decide the matter.

While we discoursed together on this subject, a pleafant thought came into Lamela's head. " Let us flay (faid he) in this hermi age. and disguise ourselves like anchorites, having first buried brother John. You shall pals for him, and I under the name of brother Antony. will go a begging in the neighbouring towns and villages. Besides our being secure from the enquiries of the corregidor, (for I don't believe he will think of fearthing for us here) I have some good acquaintance at Cuença, which we may caltivate." I approved of this extravagant proposal, not so much for Ambrole's reasons, as out of pure whim, or a defire of acting a part in a play. About thirty or forty paces from the grotto, we dug a grave, in which we modefully interred the old anchorite, after having flipt him of his cleaths; that is, a simple robe tied about his middle with a leathern girdle: we likewise cut off his beard, to make a false one for me; and in thort, after having performed his funerals, took possession of the hermitage:

We fared poorly the first day, being obliged to live on the provisions of the defunct; but next morning, before day, Lamela set out in order to sell the two mules at Toralva, and returned in the evening loaded with victuals, and other things which he had purchased. He brought every thing that was necessary for our transformation :

transformation: he made for himself a russet gown and a little red beard of horse-hair, which he fixed so artificially to his ears, that one would have sworn it was the natural produce of his chin. There is not a more dextrous young fellow in the world than he; who likewise weaved the beard of brother John, which he applied to my face, and my brown woollen cap served to cover the artifice; so that there was nothing wanting to our disguise. We sound each other so pleasantly equipped, that we could not without laughing, behold ourselves in this dress, which truly was not very suitable to our real characters. Together with brother John's robe. I wore his rosary and sandals, of which I made no scru-ple to deprive the bishop of Cuença.

We had been already three days in the hermitage. without feeing a foul appear; but on the fourth two peasants entered the grotto, bringing bread, cheese, and onions to the defunct, whom they still thought alive. As foon as I perceived them. I threw myfelf on my bed, and it was no difficult matter to deceive them: for, befides that there was not light enough to diftinguish my features, I imitated as well as I could the voice of brother John, who e last words I had heard; and they had no fuspicion of the cheat: they feemed only surprised to meet another hermit there; which when Lamela pereeived, he said with an hypocritical air, " My brethren. be not surprised to see me in this solitude: I have quitted an hermitage I possessed in Arragon, to come hither and attend the discreet brother John, who in his extreme old age has occasion for a comrade who can provide for his necessities." The peasants gave infinite praise to the charity of Ambrose, and expressed great joy, in being able to boast of having two holy personages in their country.

Lamela with a large havrefack, which he had not forgot to purchase, went a begging for the first time in the city of Cuença, which is but a small league from the hermitage. With a devout appearance which he had received from nature, and the art of making advantage of it, which he possessed in a supreme degree, he did not fail to extort alms from charitable people, with whole

whose liberalities he filled his havresack. " Mr. Ambrose, (said I to him at his return) I congratulate you upon your happy talent of melting the fouls of christians. Egad! one would think you had been a begging brother among the capuchins." "I have done fomething elfe (answered he) than fill my knapsack: you must know I have discovered a certain nymph called Barba, whom I formerly loved, and whom I have found firangely altered: she (like us) has turned devotee, and lives with two or three fifters of the same class, who edify the world in publick, and in private lead scandalous lives." As she did not know me at first, " How! Madam Barba, (said I) is it possible that you do not recollect one of your old friends, your admirer Ambrose?" " By my faith! Signior Lamela, (cried she) I should never have expected to fee you again in the habit you wear! By what adventure are you become hermit?" I cannot tell you at prefent, (I replied) the detail is somewhat long; but I will come back to-morrow to gratify your curiofity, and bring along with me my companion brother John! " Brother John! (said she, interrupting me) what, the good anchorite who lives in the hermitage near this city? Sure you joke; they fay he is more than an hundred years old." " It is true (faid I to her) that he was once of that age; but he has grown a great deal younger within these few days; and he is at present no older than I." "Well, let him come along with you, (replied Barba) I fee there is some mystery in the case."

We did not fail the next day as soon as it was dark, to go to the house of those bigots, who had prepared a sumptuous entertainment for our reception. We immediately took off our beards and hermit's dress, and without ceremony told them who we were. On their side, for fear of being indebted to us for our frankness, they shewed what falte devotees are capable of, when they banish grimace. We spent almost all the night at table, and did not retire to our grotto till the dawn. We returned thither again in a very short time; or rather, did the same thing (almost every day) during three months; in which time, we spent two thirds of our money with these nymphs: but one being suspicious of our characters, discovered the whole, and has informed justice against us, which this day intended to visit the hermitage, and secure our persons. Yesterday Ambrose, while he was begging at Cuença, met one of his sisters, who gave him a note, saying, one of my friends wrote this letter to me, which I was going to send to you by an express: shew it to brother John, and take your measures accordingly. It was this billet, gentlemen, which Lamela delivered to me in your presence, and which has made us quit so suddenly our solitary habitation.

CHAP. II. The council which Don Raphael held with his hearers, and the adventure which happened to them when they designed to quit the wood.

TTHEN Don Raphael had ended his narration, which I thought a little tedious, Don Alphonso was fo polite as to fay, it had diverted him very much. Then Signior Ambrose opened, and addressing himself to his fellow-adventurer, " Don Raphael, (said he) consider that the sun is set; it will be proper, methinks, to deliberate upon what we are to do." " You are in the right, (replied his comrade) we must determine upon the place to which we go next." " It is my opinion, (refumed Lamela) that we should fet forward without loss of time, reach Requena this night, and to-morrow enter the kingdom of Valencia, where we will give the rein to our industry, and, I foresee, perform some successful strokes. His confederate, who, on that subject, believed his presage infallible, affented to his opinion: as for Don Alphonso and me, leaving ourselves to the conduct of these honest people, we waited in silence the refult of the conference.

It being therefore resolved that we should take the road to Requena, we began to prepare ourselves for the journey; we made another meal like that in the morning; and loading the horse with the bottle, and the remains of our provisions, the approach of night lent us that darkness which we needed for our more secure travelling, and we pushed forward to get out of the wood: but we had not gone an hundred vards, when we discovered among the trees a light that made us very uneasy. " What is the meaning of that, (said Don Raphael) perhaps the ferrets of justice having pursued us from Cuença, understand that we are in this forest, and are come hither to fearch.' " I don't believe that. (said Ambrose) these are rather travellers, who being furpifed by the night, have come into this wood to wait for day. But (added he) I may be mistaken. I will go and reconnoitre, while you flay here, and I will be back in a moment. So faying, he advanced towards the light, which was not far off, and approached it foftly. Pushing gently by the leaves and boughs that were in his way; and peeping with all the attention which the thing feemed to deferve, he saw on the grass, round a candle that thuck burning in a lump of clay, four men fitting, who had just dispatched a pie, and emptied a pretty large leathern bottle, which they embraced in their turns. He likewise perceived at some distance from them a lady and gentleman tied to trees; and a little farther, a chaife with two mules richly caparifoned. He gueffed at once, that the men were robbers; and their discourse, which he overheard, affured him that he was not mistaken in his conjecture. The four banditti expressed an equal defire of possessing the lady who had fallen into their hands, and talked of casting lots for her. Lamela having fully informed himself of the matter, rejoined us, and made a faithful report of what he had feen and heard.

Upon which, Alphonso said, "Gentlemen, that lady and cavalier whom the robbers have bound to trees, are perhaps persons of the first quality: and shall we suffer them to sall victims to the barbarity and brutality of thieves? Take my advice, let us attack these banditti, and put them all to death." "With all my heart, (said Don Raphael) I am as ready to do a good as a bad action." Ambrose, on his part, signified his willingness to lend a hand to such a laudable enterprize, for which (said he) I foresee we shall be well recompensed. I dare likewise assirm, that on this occasion I was not all assaid of the danger; and that no knight-errant ever shewed more readiness to succour damsels in distress. But not to conceal the truth, the danger was not great: for Lamela having having reported, that the arms of the robbers were all in a heap at the distance of ten or twelve paces from them, it was no difficult matter for us to execute our defign. We tied our horse to a tree, and approached, as gently as possible, the place, where they were talking with great warmth, and making a noise that helped us to surprise them, we made ourselves masters of their arms, before we were discovered; then siring a volley upon them, stretched them all breathless on the spot.

During this execution the light going out, we remained in darkness; but for all that, did not delay to untie the man and woman, who were fo much engroffed by their fear, that they had not power to thank us for what we had done in their behalf. 'Tis true indeed, they did not as yet know whether to look upon us as their deliverers, or as a new troop of banditti, who had not rescued them from the others with any intention to use them better. But we encouraged them, by protesting that we would conduct them to an inn, which Ambrose affirmed was not more than half a league from thence; and that they might there take all necessary precautions for their fecurity, in going whither their affairs called them. After this affurance, with which they feemed very well fatisfied, we re-placed them in their chaife, and brought them out of the wood, leading the mules by the bridle. Our anchorites afterwards examined the pockets of the vanquished, took care of Don Alphonso's horse, secured those, that belonged to the thieves, which we found tied to trees near the field of bat le; and carrying them all off, followed brother Antony, who mounted one of the mules, in order to guide the chaife to the inn; at which, however, we did not arrive in less time than two hours, al hough he had affured us that it was not far from the wood.

e

.

h

3,

y

le

a-

3,

f-

of

ti,

id

37

e)

ife

he re

n-ela

ng

Every body in the house being a-bed, we knocked loudly at the door; upon which the landlord and his wife got up in a hurry, and were not forry to see their rest interrupted by the arrival of an equipage, which they thought would have spent more money than it did. The whole inn was lighted in a moment; Don Alphonson and the illustrious son of Lucinda offered their hands to help the cavalier and lady out of the chaife, and even ferved them as ushers to the chamber whither the landlord conducted them. There a great many compliments passed; and we were not a little astonished when we understood that it was the Count de Polan himself. and his daughter Seraphipa, whom we had delivered. It is impossible to describe the surprise of that lady, as well as of Don Alphonfo, when they recollected each The Count took no notice of it, so much was he otherwise engrossed, in recounting to us in what manner the robbers had attacked him; and how they had feized his daughter and him, after having killed his postillion, page, and valet de chambre: he ended with telling us, that he had a deep fense of the obligation he lay under to us; and if we would come to him at Toledo, where he should be in a month, we should see whether or not he was ungrateful.

354 The ADVENTURES of

Nor did the daughter of this nobleman forget to thank us for her happy deliverance: and as Raphael and I imagined we fhould please Don Alphonso, by giving him an opportunity of talking a moment in private with that young widow, we gratified his desire, by amusing the Count de Polan. " Fair Seraphina, (said Don Alphonfo to the lady, in a low voice) I will no longer complain of the fate that compels me to live like a man banished from civil society, since I have been so happy as to contribute to the important service which you have received" " How! (answered she sighing) is it you who have faved my life and honour? Is it to you that my father and I are so much indebted? Ah! Don Alphonfo! why did you kill my brother?" She said no more; but he easily perceived by these words, and the tone in which they were pronounced, that if he was violently in love with Seraphina, she was no less enamoured of him.

The End of the FIFTH BOOK.

とれるとれるとれるとれる

BOOK VI.

CHAP. I. The conduct of Gil Blas and his companions, after they quitted the Count de Polan. The important project which Ambrose formed, and the manner in which it was executed.

THE Count de Polan having spent one half of the night in thanking and assuring us, that we might depend upon his gratitude, called the landlord, in order to consult with him about the means of getting in safety to Turis, whither he designed to go. We lest that nobleman to take his measures accordingly; and departing from the inn, followed the road that Lamela was pleased to choose.

١

3

t

h

e

-

k

I

h

g

1-er

an oy

ve

ou

11-

no he vas

12-

K

After having travelled two hours, day furprifed us near Campelio; upon which, we immediately betook ourselves to the mountains, which are between that village and Requena, and there passed the day in reposing ourselves, and counting our finances, which were a good deal increased by the money of the robbers; for above three hundred pistoles were found in their pockets foon as it was dark we fet forward again, and next morning entered the kingdom of Valencia. We retired to the first wood that presented itself to our view; and pushing a good way into it, arrived at a place through which a rivulet of chrystalline water gently glided in its way to join the streams of Guadalaviar *. The shade projected by the trees, and the grais which the place afforded in abundance to our horses, would have determined us to halt here, even if we had not been resolved upon it before. We alighted therefore, and prepared to pass the day very agreeably; but when we went to breakfast, sound very little provision lest. We began to want bread, and our bottle was become a body without a soul. "Gentlemen, (said Ambrose) the most charming retreats are but disagreeable without Bacchus and Ceres; our provision must be renewed: I will for that purpose go to Xelva, an handsome town not above two leagues from hence; so that the journey will soon be sinished." So saying, he fixed the bottle and havresack on one of the horses, and mounting atop of them, went out of the wood with a dispatch that promised a speedy return.

^{*} Guadalaviar, a river of Spain that taking its rife near the fource of the Tagus, on the confines of Arragon and New Castile, traverses the first of these kingdoms, enters Valencia, waters the capital, and discharges itself into the gulph of that name.

He did not come back, however, so soon as we expected: more than half of the day elapfed, and night was ready to cover the trees with her footy wings, when we beheld our purveyor, whose stay had begun to give us some uneafiness. He exceeded our expectation by the quantity of things with which he returned loaded; he brought not only the leathern bottle filled with excellent wine, and the knapfack crammed with bread and all forts of roalted venison, but also a great bundle of cloth, which we observed with a good deal of attention. He perceived our admiration, and faid with a fmile, " I defy Don Raphael, and all the world together, to guess why I have purchased these things." Saying these words he loofed the bundle, to shew the particulars of what we had observed in the gross. He displayed a cloak, and very long black robe, two doublets with their hofe; one of those inkhorns which are composed of two pieces tied together by a string, the horn of which is separated from the pen-case; a quire of fine white paper, and a padlock with a large feal and green wax; and when he had exhibited his whole purchase, Don Raphael said to him in a jocular way, " Egad, Mr. Ambrose, it must be confessed you have made a fine bargain. What use, if you please, do you intend to make of it?" " An admirable one, (replied Lamela;) all these things have cost me but ten doubloons; and I am persuaded that they will bring us in more than five hundred: you may depend upon it, I am none of those who encumber themselves with useless effects; and to convince you that I did not buy all this like a fool, I will communicate the project I have formed."

" Having

" Having furnished myself with bread, (added he) I went into a cook's shop, where I ordered fix partridges, as many pullets and young rabbits, to be put to the fire: and while they were doing, a man came into the shop in a rage, and loudly complaining of the behaviour of a merchant in town, faid to the cook, " By St. Jago! Samuel Simon is the most ridiculous merchant in Silva : he has affronted me in open shop; the covetous wretch would not give me credit for fix ells of cloth, though he knows very well that I am a responsible tradesman, and that he can lose nothing by me. Is not he a strange animal? He fells willingly on credit to people of quality, and had rather venture with them, than oblige an honest citizen without any risk. Was there ever such madness? Damned Jew! would he were taken in. wish will be one day accomplished. There are merchants enough of my opinion."

Hearing the tradesman speak in this manner, and say a great many other things of the same nature, I had a certain forewarning that I should cheat this Samuel Simon. "Friend, (said I to the man who complained) what is the character of this person whom you mention?" "A very bad one, (answered he hastly) I assure you he is a rank usurer, though he affects the manners of a benevolent man. He was a Jew, and turned Catholick; but in his heart, he is still as much a Jew as ever Pilate was: for, they say, he abjured for interest."

S

,

e

I

S

e

d

e

25

d

a

ne

to ıst

ſe,

ln!

ve

at

ay

per

nat

the

ing

I lent an attentive ear to all the discourse of the tradesman; and did not sail, when I came out of the cook's shop, to inquire for Samuel Simon's house. A person shewed it to me; I surveyed his shop, examined every thing; and my imagination ready at a call, sketched out a stratagem which I digested, and which appeared worthy of the valet of Signior Gil Blas. I went to a broker's, where I bought these cloaths; one suit for acting an inquisitor, another to represent a scrivener, and the third for playing the part of an alguazil.

"Ah, my dear Ambrose! (cried Don Raphael, interrupting him, in a transport of joy) what a wonderful idea! what a glorious plan! I am jealous of the invention, and would willingly give up the greatest strokes

of "

of my life, to be thought the author of such a happy scheme! Yes, Lamela, (added he) I see all the richness of thy design, the execution of which ought to give thee no uneasiness. Thou hast occasion for two good actors to second thee, and they are already found. Thou, who hast the air of a devotee, will act the inquisitor very well; I will represent the secretary, and Signior Gil Blas (if he pleases) shall play the part of an alguazil: thus (continued he) are the cues distributed: to-morrow we will act the piece, and I'll answer fot its success, unless some of those unlucky accidents happen, which confound the best concerted designs.

I conceived as yet but very confusedly the project which Don Raphael liked so much; but the whole was explained to me at supper, and the trick seemed ingeni-After having dispatched part of our venison, and made our leathern bottle undergo a copious evacuation, we stretched ourselves upon the grass, and were asleep in a very short time. "Get up, get up, (cried Signior Ambrose, at day-break) people who have great enterprizes to execute, ought not to be lazy." " Deuce take you, Mr. Inquisitor, (said Don Raphael waking) how alert you are! that bodes no good to Mr. Simon." " I grant it, (replied Lamela) and will moreover tell you, I dreamed this night, that I plucked the hairs from his beard: Is not that a villainous dream for him, Mr. Secretary? These jokes were followed by a thousand more, which put us all in good humour: we made a chearful breakfast, and then prepared for acting our feveral parts. Ambrose put on the long gown and cloak, which gave him all the air of a commissary of the holy office: Don Raphael and I dreffed ourselves likewise fo as to bear a pretty good refemblance to a fecretary and alguazil. We employed a good deal of time in difguifing outfelves; and it was past two o'clock in the afternoon, when we quitted the wood, and fet out for Xelva. 'Tis true, indeed, we were in no hurry, as our comedy would not begin before the twilight: we therefore went at a very flow pace, and stopping at the citygate, waited there till night.

As foon as it was dark, we left our horses in this place to the care of Don Alphonso, who was very glad that he had no other part to perform. Don Raphael, Ambrose, and I, went immediately into a publican's in the neighbourhood; and Mr. Inquisitor going foremost, said to the landlord with great gravity, " Master, I want to talk with you in private." The landlord carried us into a parlour, where Lamela finding him alone with us, faid, " I am commissary of the holy office, come hither upon a very important affair." At these words the publican grew pale, and replied with a faultering voice. that he hoped he had given no cause of complaint to the holy inquisition: " Therefore (replied Ambrote) it has no intention to give you any trouble: God forbid that, too prompt to punish, it should confound innocence with guilt; it is fevere, but always just: in a word, one must dese ve its chasisements before he feels them. It was not you who brought me to Xelva, but a certain merchant called Samuel Simon, of whom we have received a very bad report: it is faid that he is still a lew. and embraced christianity thro' motives purely carnal. I order you therefore, in the name of the holy office, to tell me what you know of that man. Beware of excufing him, on account of his being your neighbour. and perhaps your friend; for I declare, if I perceive in your evidence the least reserve, you yourself are a lost man. Come, fecretary, (added he, turning to Raphael) do your duty."

Mr. Secretary, who already had his paper and inkhorn in his hand, fat down at a table, and prepared, with the most ferious air in the world, to write the deposition of the landlord; who, on his part, protested that he " Well then, (faid the would not betray the truth. commissary inquisitor to him) let us begin: answer only to my questions; I ask no more." "Do you see Samuel Simon frequent the church?" "Tis what I have not observed, (said the publican) I don't remember to have feen him at church." "Good! (cried the inquifitor.) Write, that he is never feen at church." " I don't fay fo, Mr. Commissary, (replied the landlord) I only fay, that I never faw him there: he may be in the fame church with me, though I don't perceive him." " Friend, (said Lamela) you forget that you must not, in your examination, excuse Samuel Simon: I have told

n

r.

d a

e-

k,

ly

ise

nd

if-

he

for

Juc

re-

ity-

lace

hat

VOL. II.

you the consequences of it. You must mention only those things that are against him, and not one word in his favour." "If that be the case, Signior Licentia'e, (resumed the landlord) you can't reap much from my deposition; I am not acquainted with the merchant in question; therefore can say neither good nor ill of him: but if you want to know how he lives in his own family, I will go and call Gaspard his 'prentice, whom you may interrogate: he comes here sometimes, to make merry with his friends; and such a tongue! he will discover the whole life and conversation of his master, and I warrant it, find employment enough for your secretary."

" I like your franknets, (faid Ambrose) and you shew your zeal for the holy office, by informing me of a man acquainted with the morals of Simon. I will report you to the inquifition. Make haste, then (continued he) and bring hither that same Gaspard, whom you mention. But do things discreetly, that his mafter may have no fufpicion of what passes." The publican acquitted himfelf of his commission, with great secrecy and diligence, and brought along with him the merchant's 'prentice, who was just such a very talkative young fellow as we wanted. "Welcome, child, (faid Lamela to him) you fee, in me, an inquisitor, nominated by the holy office, to take informations against Samuel Simon, who is accused of Judaism. You live with him, and, of confequence, are witness to the greatest part of his behaviour. I believe it is unnecessary to advertise you of the obligation you are under to declare all that you know of him, when I order you to do fo, in the name of the holy inquisition." "Signior licentiate, (replied the young man) I am very ready to fatisfy you on that head, without being commanded in the name of the holv office. If my master was to take me for his text, I am perfuaded that he would not spare me; I will therefore deal as plainly with him, and tell you, in the first place, that he is a close hunks, whose true fentiments it is impossible to discover: one who affects all the exteriors of a holy man, but has not one scruple of virtue at bottom. He goes every evening to the house of a little Abigail." " I am glad to hear that, (said Ambrose, interrupting him) and I see, by what you say, that that he is a man of bad morals; but, answer precisely to the questions I am going to ask. I am particularly enjoined to know what are his sentiments with respect to religion. Tell me, do you eat pork in your house?" "I don't think (replied Gaspard) that we have eat of it twice, during the whole year that I have lived with him." "Very well (resumed master Inquisitor:) write, secretary, that pork is never eaten in the house of Samuel Simon. But, to make amends for that, (continued he) you, doubtless, eat lamb sometimes." "Yes, sometimes, (replied the 'prentice) we had some, for example, last Easter." "A lucky epocha! (cried the commissary) write, secretary, that Simon keeps the passover. This goes on excellently well, and, methicks, we have received good intelligence.

e

u

1-

1-

of

u ne

b's

at

ne

t.

ill

he

its x-

a nay,

Besides, you must tell me, friend, (added Lamela) if you have never seen your master cares little children." " A thousand times, (replied Gaspard) when he sees little boys pass by his shop, if they are at all handsome, he stops and fondles them. Write, master secretary, (faid the Inquifitor, interrupting him) that Samuel Simon is violently suspected of decoying Christian children into his house, in order to cut their throats. A fine profelyte indeed! Oh, ho! Mr. Simon, you shall have to do with the holy office, take my word for it; you must not imagine that you will be allowed to make your barbarous facrifices with impunity. Courage, zealous Gaspard, (laid he to the 'prentice) declare all that you know of the matter; and give us to understand, that this false catholic is more attached than ever to the Jewish customs and ceremonies. Does not he spend one day of the week in total inaction?" " No, (answered Gaspard) I have not observed that: I only perceive that on some days he shurs him'elf up in his closet, where he remains a long time." " Ah ha! (cried the commiffary) he keeps the labbath, as fure as I am an inquifitor. Mark, fecretary, mark that he religiously obferves the fast of the sabbath. Ah! the abominable wretch! I have only one thing more to ask. Does not he speak also of Jerusalem?" "Very often, (replied the young man) he relates to us the history of the Jews. and in what manner the temple of Jerusalem was deftroyed:" stroyed." "Right! (said Ambrose) master secretary, let not this piece of intelligence escape you: write, in large characters, that Samuel Simon breathes nothing but the restoration of the temple; and that he meditates night and day the re-establishment of his nation. I do not want to know any more; therefore, it is needless to ask any other questions: what the trusty Gaspard has deposed, is enough to bring a whole tynagogue to the stake."

Master commissary of the holy office having interrogated the 'prentice in this manner, told him, he might retire: but ordered him in the name of the holy inquisition, to conceal from his master every tittle of what had passed. Gaspard having promised to obey, took his leave; and we did not tarry long after he went out, but leaving the public-house, as gravely as we had entered, went and knocked at the door of Samuel Simon, who opened it with his own hand; and if he was aftonished to see three such figures as we were, he was much more so, when Lamela, being spokesman, said to him, with an imperious tone, "Mr. Samuel, I command you, in the name of the holy inquisition, of which I have the honour to be commissary, to deliver into my hand, this instant, the key of your closet: I want to see if I cannot find fomething to justify the informations which have been presented to us, against you."

The merchant, confounded at these words, reeled two steps backward, as if he had received a blow on the stomach. Far from suspecting us of any trick, he believed implicitly, that some secret enemy wanted to subject him to the suspicion of the holy office; perhaps too, knowing himself to be no good catholic, he had cause to be assaid of an information. Be that as it will, I never saw a man more disconcerted: he obeyed without resistance, and opened his closet, with all the respect that a man could shew, who is in terror of the inquisition. "At least, (said Ambrose, while he went in) at least you receive the orders of the holy office without contumacy. But (added he) retire into another room, and leave me at liberty to persorm my sunction."

Samuel

Samuel was as obedient to his order as to the first: he remained in his shop, while we three entered his closet, and began to fearch for his cash, which we easily found; for it was in an open coffer, and in much greater quantity than we could carry off, confitting of a great number of bags piled upon one another; but the whole in filver. We should have liked gold better; but things being as they were, we were fain to accommodate ourfelves to necessity, and fill our pockets with ducats. We fluffed our breeches with them, and crammed them into every other part which we judged proper to conceal In short, we were heavy laden, though our cargo did not appear; and this was owing to the address of Ambrose and Don Raphael, who, by their behaviour on this occasion, let me fee that there is nothing like one's being mafter of his trade.

After having done our business so successfully, we came out of the closet, and, for a reason that the reader will eafily guess, master Inquisitor took out his padlock, and fixed it to the door with his own hand, then applying the feal, faid to Simon, " Master Samuel, I forbid you, in the name of the holy inquisition, to touch this padlock, as well as the seal, which you are bound to respect, since it is the true seal of the holy office. I will return at the fame hour to-morrow, in order to take it off, and bring surther orders for you." So saying, he made him open the street-door, through which we joyfully passed, one after another. When we had gone about fifty yards, we began to walk with such speed and nimbleness, that we scarce touched the ground, notwithstanding the burdens which we carried. We foon got out of town, and remounting our hortes, pushed towards Segorba, giving thanks to the god Mercury, for fuch an happy event.

e

-

it

de

e nt

er

el

CHAP. II. The resolution which Don Alphonso and Gil Blas formed after this adventure

E travelled all night, according to our laudable custom, and found ourselves at break of day, near a little village two leagues from Segorba. As we S 3 were were all fatigued, we willingly quitted the highway, to get among some willows, which we perceived at the bottom of a little hill, ten or twelve hundred paces from the village, in which we did not think proper to stop. We sound that the willows yielded an agreeable shade, being watered by a small rivulet; and the place suiting our taste, we resolved to spend the day in it. Alighting, therefore, we unbridled our horses to let them seed, and lay down upon the grass, where we took a little repose. We then emptied our knapsac and leathern bottle, and having made a plentiful breaksast, counted all the money which we had taken from Samuel Simon, and which amounted to three thousand ducats; so that with this sum, and what we had before, we might have boasted of having a pretty good stock.

As it was necessary for some of us to go and bny provision, Ambrose and Don Raphael, having quitted their dress of inquititor and secretary, said that they would take that charge upon themselves; that the adventure at Xelva had only whetted their appetite: that they longed to be at Segorba, to fee if some occasion would not offer of striking a new stroke. "You have nothing to do, (added the fon of Lucinda) but wait for us under these willows; we will not tarry, but rejoin you in a very short time." " Signior Don Raphael, (cried I. laughing) bid us rather wait for you till doomiday; if you leave us now, I believe we need not expect to fee you fooner." "We are affronted by your suspicion, (replied Signior Ambrose) but we deserve it at your hands: your distrust is excusable, after what we did at Valladolid; and we cannot blame you for thinking that we will make no more scruple of forsaking you, than of abandoning our convades in that city: but, however, you are mistaken; the confederates, from whose company we withdrew, were persons of very bad characters, and their fociety began to grow insupportable. must do justice to people of our profession, by affirming that there are no affociates in civil life less divided by interest than they: but when there is not a conformity of inclinations among them, their good understanding may be broke, as well as that of the rest of mankind. Wherefore. Signior Gil Blas, (added Lamela) we beg that you and Don Alphonso will have a little more confidence in us; and let not the desire of Don Raphael and me to go to Segorba, give you the least uneafiness"

" It is an easy matter (laid the son of Lucinda) to rid them of all cause of anxiety: let them remain masters of the cash, and then they will have, in their own hands, good fecurity for our return. You fee, Signior Gil Blas, (added he) that we come to the point at once. You shall have pledges in your hands, and I can affure you, that Ambrose and I will set out without the least apprehension of your giving us the slip After such a certain myrk of our fidelity, won't you trust entirely to our promise?" "Yes, gentlemen, (said 1) and you may now do what you please." They departed immediately with the leathern bottle and knapfac, leaving me under the willows with Don Alphon'o, who, after they were gone, faid to me, " Signior Gil Blas. I must difclose my sentiments to you. I upbraid myself with having had the complaifance to come fo far with two tharpeis: you cannot imagine how often I have repented of this my conduct. Yesterday, while I took care of the horses, I made a thou and mortifying reflections : I confidered, that it ill became a young man, who has principles of honour, to live with such wicked wretches as Don Raphael and Lamela; that it unluckily, one day, which may not be far off, a trick should miscarry, by which we shall fall into the hands of justice, I shall be fhamefully punished with them as a thief, and undergo the most infamous chastisement. These images incelfantly occur to my fancy; and lown I have refolved. that I may no longer be an accomplice of their mifdemeanours, to separate from them for ever. I don't believe (continued he) that you will disapprove of my defign" " No, I'll affure you, (answered I) though you have feen me act the part of an alguazil, in the comedy of Samuel Simon, don't imagine that these fort of pieces are to my taste. I take heaven to witness, that while I played fuch a fine part, I faid within myfelf, In faith, Mr. Gil Blas, if justice should now come and seize you by the collar, you would richly deserve the falary which

e

1,

T

it

t

of

г,

n-

3,

Ve

ng

by

ot

ay

be

which she would bestow. I feel myself, therefore, no more disposed than you, Signior Don Alphonso, to remain longer in such good company; and if you will give me leave, I will accompany you. When the gentlemen return, we will demand our share of the sinunces, and to morrow morning, or this very night, bid them an eternal adieu."

The beau iful Scraphina's lover approved of my proposal: " Let us (said he) get into Valencia, and embaik for Italy, where we may engage in the Venetian service. Is it not better to carry arms, than lead this base guilty life? we shall even be in a condition to make a pretty good figure with the money which we have: not that I can use such ill gotten wealth without remorfe; but befides, that I am compeled by necessity, if ever I make the least fortune in war, I swear that I will indemnify Samuel Simon " " I affured Don Alphonso, that I entertained the same sentiments, and, in short, we resolved to leave our comrades, next morning before day. We had not the least temptation to profit by their abfence, that is, to decamp immediately with the cash : the confidence they had sh. wn, in the leaving us masters of the money, did not permit us to harbour fuch a thought.

Ambrose and Don Raphael returned from Segorba in the evening; and the first thing they told us was, that their journey had been prosperous; that they had laid the foundation of a stratagem, which, in all likelihood, would be more advantageous than the last. Accordingly, the son of Lucinda, was going to inform us of the particulars, when Don Alphonso declared his resolution to leave them; and let them know that I had the same intention. They used all their endeavours, in vain, to engage us to accompany them in their expeditions; for we took leave of them next day, after having made an equal partition of the money, and proceeded on our way to Valencia.

CHAP. III. After what disagreeable incident Don Alphonso found his wishes fulfilled; and by what adwenture Gil Blas, of a sudden, saw himself in a happy situation.

Where unfortunately being obliged to halt, Don Alphonso fell sick of a high fever, with violent paroxysms, which made me afraid of his life. Luckily there was no physician in the place, and I was quit for my fear: he was out of danger at the end of three days, and my care helped to re-establish his health. He showed himself very sensible of what I had done for him; and as we selt a reciprocal kindness for one another, we fwore an eternal friendship.

We betook ourselves again to the road, still resolved, when we should arrive at Valencia, to take the first opportunity of a passage into Italy. Put heaven dispoted of us otherwise. Seeing a number of peasants, of both sexes dancing in a circle, and making merry, before the gate of a fine castle, we approached to behold their mirth; and Don Alphonso expected nothing less than the surprize with which he was seized all or a sudden. He perceived the Baron de Steinbach, who no sooner knew him again, than he ran to him with open arms, saying, in transport of joy, "Ah, Don Alphonso! is it you! what an agreeable rencounter is this! while enquiry is made after you all over the kingdom, chance presents you to my view."

My companion alighting immediately, ran and embraced the Baron, whose joy seemed immoderate. "Come, my son, (said the good old man to him) you will now know who you are, and enjoy the most perfect happines." So saying, he carried him into the castle, which I likewise entered along with them; for while they embraced one another, I had alighted and tied our horses to a tree. The master of the castle was the first person whom we met. He was a man of about fifty years of age, and a very engaging aspect: "Signior, (said the Baron de Steinbach, presenting Don Alphonso to him) behold your son." At these words, Don Cæsar de Leyva (fo was the master of the castle called) threw his arms about Don Alphonso's neck, and weeping with joy, " My dear fon, (faid he) you tee in me the author of your being : if If I have let you remain fo long in ignorance of your birth, believe me, I did in that a cruel violence to myself: I have a thousand times fighed with forrow; but I could not do otherwife. I married your mother through inclination, tho' the was of a birth inferior to mine; and lived under the authority of a harsh father, who reduced me to the necessity of keeping fecret a marriage contracted without his confent. The Baron de Steinbach alone was in my confidence, and it was in concert with me that he brought you up. In thort my father is no more, and I now am at liberty to declare you my fole heir. This is not all, (added he) you shall be married to a young lady, whole nobility equals mine." " Signior, (cried Don Alphonio, interrupting him) don't make me pay too dear for the happiness which you bestow. Cannot I know that I have the honour of being your fon, without learning at the fame time, that you want to make me unhappy? Ah, Sir! be not more cruel than your own father, who, though he did not approve of your pation, was not to fevere as to force you to marry." " Son, (replied Don Cæfar) I don't intend to tyrannize over your affections: but be fo complai ant as to tee the lady whom I defline for your bed: that is all I exact of your obedience. Though the is a charming creature, and a very advantageous match for you, I promise not to constrain you to make her your wife. She is now in the cattle; follow me, and you will own, that there never was a more amiable object. So faving, he conducted Don Alphonfo into an apartment, whi her I attended them, with the Baron de Steinbach.

There was the Count de Polan, with his two daughters, Scraphin and Julia, and Don Fernand, his fon-in-law, who was nephew to Don Cæsar: there were other ladies and gentlemen present also. Don Fernand (as was already observed) had carried off Julia; and it was on occasion of the marriage of these two lovers, that the the peasants of the neighbourhood were assembled to make merry. As foon as Don Alphonfo appeared, and his father had prefented him to the company, the Count de Polan got up, and running to embrace him, faid " Welcome, my deliverer! Don Aiphonio, (added he) observe the power that virtue has on generous minds : if you killed my fon, you have also saved my life. I facrifice my refentment to you, and give you that Seraphina, whose honour you have preferved. In this mant er I acquit myself of my obligation." The son of Don Casar did not fail to tettify to the Count de Polan, how much he was affected with his generofity; and I don't know whether he felt more joy in discovering his birth, or in learning that he was to be Seraphina's husband In effect, that marriage was celebrated in a few days after. to the infinite satisfaction of the parties concerned.

As I was also one of the Count's deliverers, that nobleman who knew me again, affured me, he would take upon himself the care of making my fortune; but I thanked him for his generosity, and would not leave Don Alphonso, who made me steward of his house, and honoured me with his confidence. Scarce was he married, when the trick which had been played upon Samuel Simon, lying on his conscience, he fent me to that merchant, with all the money which had been stolen from him. I went accordingly to make restitution, and began the business of a steward, by doing that which ought to be the end of it.

er as at ae The END of the SECOND VOLUME.

